THE LAST ESTOP: WHY JUDICIAL ESTOPPEL SHOULD BE A COURT’S LAST RESORT FOR UNDISCLOSED LAWSUITS FROM BANKRUPTCY†

ABSTRACT

This Comment analyzes federal and state courts’ application of judicial estoppel to a lawsuit that a consumer debtor failed to disclose in a prior bankruptcy case. Federal courts are split on most aspects of the judicial estoppel doctrine when applied to an undisclosed lawsuit from bankruptcy. Not all state courts recognize the doctrine of judicial estoppel, and those that do recognize it may apply the federal judicial estoppel doctrine or their own doctrine. Confusion throughout the federal circuits and state courts regarding judicial estoppel has harmed debtors, creditors, and the federal bankruptcy court system.

This Comment argues that non-bankruptcy courts should not apply the judicial estoppel doctrine to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy. Application of judicial estoppel in this context is both inequitable and contrary to provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. The continued effect of the automatic stay on property of the bankruptcy estate makes all non-bankruptcy court judgments dismissing undisclosed lawsuits void. Defendants who seek to assert judicial estoppel against an undisclosed lawsuit must first petition the bankruptcy court to reopen the debtor’s bankruptcy case to request relief from the automatic stay. The bankruptcy court may then appoint a trustee who can either abandon the claim or pursue the claim for the benefit of the creditors. This approach is both equitable and conforms to the Bankruptcy Code. This Comment concludes that judicial estoppel should not and may not be applied to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy until the bankruptcy court grants relief from the automatic stay.

† This comment received the 2016 Mary Laura “Chee” Davis Award for Writing Excellence.
INTRODUCTION ........................................................................................... 1211

I. BACKGROUND OF RELEVANT BANKRUPTCY PROVISIONS .......... 1215
   A. Property of the Estate and the Debtor’s Duty to Disclose .... 1216
   B. The Automatic Stay ................................................................. 1219
   C. Jurisdiction of Bankruptcy Courts .......................................... 1221

II. THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE JUDICIAL ESTOPPEL DOCTRINE ........... 1222
   A. The Judicial Estoppel Doctrine and Its Goals ...................... 1223
   B. Federal Courts’ Application of Judicial Estoppel ................. 1225
      1. The Appropriate Standard of Review ............................ 1226
      2. Applying the Maine Factors in the Undisclosed Lawsuit Context ............................................. 1226
      3. Choice of Law when Sitting in Diversity ......................... 1230
   C. State Courts’ Application of Judicial Estoppel ................. 1232
      1. Judicial Estoppel and Choice of Law ....................... 1232
      2. Jurisdictional Issue in the Undisclosed Lawsuit Context . 1233

III. ALTERNATIVES TO JUDICIAL ESTOPPEL .......................................... 1234
   A. The Debtor Is Not the Real Party in Interest ................. 1235
   B. Reopening the Debtor’s Bankruptcy Case ...................... 1238

IV. AN EQUITABLE FRAMEWORK BASED ON THE BANKRUPTCY CODE 1240
   A. Application of Judicial Estoppel Thwarts the Goals of Judicial Estoppel and the Bankruptcy System ................. 1240
   B. An Equitable, Statutory Framework ................................. 1243
      1. The Automatic Stay Continues to Act Against Undisclosed Lawsuits ............................................. 1244
      2. The Bankruptcy Court’s Exclusive Jurisdiction over Undisclosed Lawsuits .................................... 1246
      3. Equitable Treatment of Undisclosed Lawsuits ................ 1248

CONCLUSION ............................................................................................... 1250
INTRODUCTION

The notion that plaintiffs are entitled to their day in court is a fundamental characteristic of the United States judicial system. However, plaintiffs are routinely denied their day in court when they have previously filed for bankruptcy but failed to disclose a potential lawsuit. In bankruptcy, a potential lawsuit is an asset that the debtor must disclose to the bankruptcy court. When a debtor fails to disclose a potential lawsuit on her bankruptcy schedules and later pursues that lawsuit in a non-bankruptcy court, the non-bankruptcy court may determine that the debtor has taken inconsistent positions in an attempt to manipulate the judicial system. Courts approach this issue in different ways, but the majority of courts apply the doctrine of judicial estoppel.

Judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine that is meant to protect the integrity of the court system. Judicial estoppel allows a court to dismiss a plaintiff’s claim if the plaintiff has taken inconsistent positions in different court proceedings to manipulate the judicial system and gain an advantage. Federal courts and many state courts have applied judicial estoppel when a debtor-turned-plaintiff fails to disclose a lawsuit in bankruptcy.

The following examples will better illustrate the role of judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context. Consider the stories of Jane and John. Jane’s situation represents the case of the debtor who is unaware of her claim and whose nondisclosure was due to an innocent mistake. John’s situation represents the case of the debtor attempting to take advantage of the courts and get an unfair benefit from the judicial process.

Jane is a single mother who works at a restaurant in California. For years, Jane has always felt uncomfortable with the way her manager interacts with her, but she continues to work there because the job pays well. Unfortunately, Jane’s manager fires her because she constantly refuses his romantic advances. Jane is unable to find comparable work and has to settle for a job that pays much less. After a few months of struggling to pay her bills, Jane decides to file a petition for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. She files without an attorney, receives a discharge, and comes out of bankruptcy with a fresh start. Six months after receiving her discharge, Jane realizes that she may have a wrongful termination claim against the restaurant that fired her. Jane hires a lawyer and files a complaint against the restaurant in federal court.

John runs a successful business in Vermont. Despite his success, John lives such a lavish lifestyle that he is unable to pay all of his debts. John decides to file a petition for relief under Chapter 7 and hires an attorney. John’s attorney asks him if he has any potential or pending lawsuits. John knows he has a claim against a business associate, but decides not to tell his attorney. John is granted a discharge in his bankruptcy case. Six months later, John files a lawsuit against his business associate in Vermont state court.

In an ideal system, judicial estoppel would prevent debtors like John from taking advantage of the judicial system and would forgive Jane for her innocent mistake. However, the development of judicial estoppel has been far from ideal. Debtors similar to Jane are estopped in some jurisdictions, and debtors like John may bring their claims without fear of being estopped in other jurisdictions.

The stories of Jane and John represent two possible outcomes when a debtor fails to disclose a lawsuit in bankruptcy. Despite the varying circumstances underlying Jane’s and John’s stories, the same basic elements are present: something bad happened, resulting in their potentially bringing a lawsuit; they

---

10 See Granados v. Supervalu, Inc., No. LA CV11-10175 JAK (MANx), 2012 WL 3562521, at *4 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2012) (“The issue . . . with respect to estoppel is not whether Plaintiff acted in good faith[,] . . . [but] is instead whether Plaintiff had sufficient factual knowledge about the conditions of his employment to know that a potential cause of action existed during the pendency of his bankruptcy.” (emphasis omitted)).

11 The Supreme Court of Vermont has not adopted the doctrine of judicial estoppel. In re Chittenden Solid Waste Dist., 928 A.2d 1183, 1192 (Vt. 2007) (noting that the Supreme Court has “not affirmatively adopted judicial estoppel”).
later ended up in financial distress and sought relief from the bankruptcy court; they received relief from the bankruptcy court; they pursued the lawsuit; and then the defendant raised the affirmative defense of judicial estoppel. Jane and John’s stories diverge on one important issue: forum choice. Jane had a federal claim that she brought in federal court. John had a state law claim that he brought in state court. There are other forum possibilities that may arise in this context.

The undisclosed lawsuit journey always begins in a bankruptcy court, but may end up in state or federal court under state or federal law. A plaintiff may file a federal claim in state court or federal court. If the plaintiff chooses to file in state court, the defendant may remove the lawsuit to federal court. A plaintiff may file a state law claim in state court or in federal court if she can meet the requirements for diversity jurisdiction. If the plaintiff’s claim meets the requirements for diversity jurisdiction, and the plaintiff files in state court, the defendant may still remove the case to federal court.

In the undisclosed lawsuit context, forum choice has become a deciding factor when judicial estoppel arises because federal and state courts do not apply judicial estoppel uniformly. Federal circuits are also split on choice of law issues for judicial estoppel when sitting in diversity jurisdiction. Moreover, undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy create jurisdictional issues that are different for state courts and non-bankruptcy federal courts. The inherent variability of judicial estoppel as a discretionary, common-law doctrine, combined with the various forum and choice of law possibilities, has created extreme confusion and inconsistency throughout the court systems. This inconsistency has led to inequitable results from the perspective of debtors, creditors, and the bankruptcy court system—resulting in a need for a more

---

12 See Consumer Crusade, Inc. v. Affordable Health Care Sols., Inc., 121 P.3d 350, 353 (Colo. App. 2005) (“[S]tate courts of general jurisdiction are presumed to have jurisdiction over federal claims. This presumption can only be rebutted ‘by an explicit statutory directive, by unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility between state-court jurisdiction and federal interests.’” (citations omitted)).

13 See Burns v. Pemco Aeroplex, Inc., 291 F.3d 1282, 1285 (11th Cir. 2002) (“In this case, judicial estoppel is raised in the context of a bankruptcy proceeding and a federal employment discrimination case . . . .”).

14 See 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a) (2012); Beneficial Nat’l Bank v. Anderson, 539 U.S. 1, 6 (2003) (“A civil action filed in a state court may be removed to federal court if the claim is one ‘arising under’ federal law.”).

16 See 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b) (providing the requirements for removal based on diversity of citizenship).

17 See infra Part II.B–C.

18 See infra notes 155–67 and accompanying text.

19 See infra Part IV.B.

20 See infra Part II.B–C.
uniform and equitable approach that judicial estoppel is not equipped to solve on its own.\textsuperscript{21}

Judicial estoppel’s inequitable results in this context have led the Eleventh Circuit to reconsider its judicial estoppel doctrine \textit{en banc}.\textsuperscript{22} In \textit{Slater v. U.S. Steel Corp.}, the Eleventh Circuit judicially estopped debtor-plaintiff Sandra Slater’s employment discrimination lawsuit for failing to disclose the lawsuit on her bankruptcy schedules.\textsuperscript{23} Judge Tjoflat concurred in the judgment but wrote specially to identify the equitable issues that judicial estoppel creates in the undisclosed lawsuit context.\textsuperscript{24} Other federal and state courts may soon question judicial estoppel’s inequitable effects in this context as well, and those courts should consider the goals of the bankruptcy system and all applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.

Courts should use judicial estoppel as a last resort when a debtor fails to disclose a lawsuit in her bankruptcy case and later brings that lawsuit in a non-bankruptcy court. In this context, judicial estoppel has failed to achieve its main goal of protecting the integrity of the court system.\textsuperscript{25} Even in an ideal system—where judicial estoppel is applied uniformly to prevent debtor-plaintiffs like John from misleading the courts—creditors are harmed.\textsuperscript{26} As a stand-alone doctrine, judicial estoppel is inadequate to protect creditors, the bankruptcy court, and the goals of the federal bankruptcy system.\textsuperscript{27} In addition, non-bankruptcy courts have failed to properly apply the Bankruptcy Code in this context, affecting bankruptcy courts’ ability to adequately administer property of bankruptcy estates.\textsuperscript{28}

This Comment proposes that non-bankruptcy courts should require the parties involved in an undisclosed lawsuit to return to the bankruptcy court. Returning to the bankruptcy court is required due to the continued effect of the automatic stay.\textsuperscript{29} The bankruptcy court is the only court that may grant relief

\begin{footnotesize}
\textsuperscript{21} See \textit{infra} Part IV.A.
\textsuperscript{22} Slater \textit{v. U.S. Steel Corp.}, 820 F.3d 1193 (11th Cir. 2016), \textit{reh’g en banc granted, opinion vacated} (Aug. 30, 2016).
\textsuperscript{23} \textit{Id.} at 1199.
\textsuperscript{24} \textit{Id.} at 1210 (Tjoflat, J., specially concurring) (arguing that, as a result of the Eleventh Circuit’s decision, “U.S. Steel is granted a windfall, Slater’s creditors are deprived of an asset, and the Bankruptcy Court is stripped of its discretion”).
\textsuperscript{25} See \textit{infra} Part IV.A.
\textsuperscript{26} See \textit{infra} Part IV.A.
\textsuperscript{27} See \textit{infra} Part IV.A.
\textsuperscript{28} See \textit{infra} Part IV.B.
\textsuperscript{29} See \textit{infra} Part IV.B.
\end{footnotesize}
from the automatic stay. When the bankruptcy case is reopened, the bankruptcy court may provide a more equitable solution from the perspective of the courts as well as the debtor and creditors. Both courts will also be substantially protected from manipulation if the bankruptcy court is allowed the opportunity to rule on the judicial estoppel issue when necessary.

This Comment proceeds in four Parts. Part I provides background on the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and the bankruptcy court’s jurisdictional grant as they relate to judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context. Part II discusses state and federal courts’ inequitable use of judicial estoppel in this context. Part III analyzes two alternatives to judicial estoppel that some courts have employed to avoid inequitable results. Part III also discusses how those alternatives create the same inequitable results as judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context. Part IV analyzes the equitable and statutory concerns created by judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context and provides an equitable framework for undisclosed lawsuits that incorporates necessary provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.

I. BACKGROUND OF RELEVANT BANKRUPTCY PROVISIONS

Judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine that reflects the principle that a litigant should not be allowed to benefit by taking inconsistent positions in different legal proceedings when attempting to mislead the courts. Courts that have applied judicial estoppel to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy have incorporated provisions of the Bankruptcy Code into the judicial estoppel analysis. This Part discusses relevant provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, the bankruptcy court’s jurisdictional grant, and how those provisions relate to judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context. This Part first analyzes the 30 See In re Dominguez, 312 B.R. 499, 505 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2004) (“Congress has declared that actions to ‘terminate, annul, or modify’ the automatic stay are core bankruptcy proceedings. . . . Consequently, it is undisputed that only a bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to terminate, annul or modify the automatic stay.” (citation omitted)).

31 See infra Part II.A.
32 New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 749 (2001); William Houston Brown, Lundy Carpenter & Donna T. Snow, Debtors’ Counsel Beware: Use of the Doctrine of Judicial Estoppel in Nonbankruptcy Forums, 75 AM. BANKR. L.J. 197, 200 (2001) [hereinafter Debtors’ Counsel Beware] (“The doctrine’s underlying theory is that a party should not be permitted to take one position under oath, which was in some manner accepted by one court, and to then alter that position in a subsequent judicial proceeding, resulting in a second court being misled in some manner . . . .”).
33 See, e.g., Guay v. Burack, 677 F.3d 10, 17 (1st Cir. 2012) (applying judicial estoppel to an undisclosed lawsuit from bankruptcy and discussing property of the estate, § 541(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code, and the debtor’s duty to disclose, § 521(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code).
broad definition of property of the bankruptcy estate, which encompasses undisclosed lawsuits, and the debtor’s duty to disclose undisclosed lawsuits. It then discusses the automatic stay, which has largely been ignored by non-bankruptcy courts in this context. This Part ends by discussing the bankruptcy court’s exclusive jurisdiction over property of the estate.

A. Property of the Estate and the Debtor’s Duty to Disclose

When a debtor files a petition for relief under the Bankruptcy Code, the filing of the petition creates the bankruptcy estate, which consists of “all legal or equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the case.”34 Section 541 of the Bankruptcy Code defines the bankruptcy estate for all bankruptcy cases.35 Congress intended for the scope of § 541 to be broad.36 This broad definition of the bankruptcy estate encompasses nearly all of a debtor’s prepetition assets (assets that exist before the debtor files for bankruptcy),37 including potential lawsuits belonging to the debtor.38

The Bankruptcy Code provides debtors different options for dealing with their indebtedness.39 This Comment focuses on individuals filing petitions for relief under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code.40 Filing a petition for relief under Chapter 7 “authorizes a discharge of prepetition debts following the liquidation of the debtor’s assets by a bankruptcy trustee, who then distributes the proceeds 35 See 11. U.S.C. § 541(a) (“The commencement of a case under . . . this title creates an estate.”).

---

37 See Harris v. Viegelahn, 135 S. Ct. 1829, 1835 (2015) (“While a Chapter 7 debtor must forfeit virtually all his prepetition property, he is able to make a ‘fresh start’ by shielding from creditors his postpetition earnings and acquisitions.”); Parker v. Wendy’s Int’l, Inc., 365 F.3d 1268, 1272 (11th Cir. 2004) (discussing property of the estate and noting that “[s]uch property includes causes of action belonging to the debtor at the commencement of the bankruptcy case”).
38 See Parker, 365 F.3d at 1272 (describing that the bankruptcy estate “includes causes of action belonging to the debtor at the commencement of the bankruptcy case”); supra note 34 and accompanying text.
40 For the purposes of judicial estoppel, the main difference between Chapter 7 cases and Chapter 13 cases concerns the scope of property of the estate. When an individual debtor files a petition for relief under Chapter 13, the bankruptcy estate includes the debtor’s prepetition assets as well as all property acquired after the debtor files for bankruptcy and before the bankruptcy case closes. See 11 U.S.C. § 1306 (2012); Harris, 135 S. Ct. at 1835 (“The Chapter 13 estate from which creditors may be paid includes both the debtor’s property at the time of his bankruptcy petition, and any wages and property acquired after filing.”). Because this Comment focuses on judicial estoppel’s application to prepetition assets, discussing differences between Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 cases is beyond the scope of this Comment.
to creditors."^{41} In a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case, the trustee controls the bankruptcy estate.^{42} A Chapter 7 debtor no longer has any property rights in assets belonging to the bankruptcy estate as long as the asset remains part of the bankruptcy estate.^{43} An asset only returns to the debtor in the event such asset is abandoned pursuant to § 554 of the Bankruptcy Code^{44} or the bankruptcy court dismisses the debtor’s bankruptcy case.^{45} If the debtor’s bankruptcy case is not dismissed and the asset is not abandoned or administered in the bankruptcy case, the asset remains a part of the bankruptcy estate indefinitely.^{46} Thus, when a debtor fails to disclose a lawsuit in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case that is not dismissed, the undisclosed lawsuit remains part of the bankruptcy estate indefinitely because the Chapter 7 trustee neither administered nor abandoned the lawsuit.^{47}

Debtors have a duty to disclose all of their assets and liabilities.^{48} The debtor’s assets include all “[c]laims against third parties whether or not [the debtor] has filed a lawsuit or made a demand for payment.”^{49} The debtor must disclose all assets so that they are available for distribution to creditors.^{50} When a debtor fails to disclose a potential lawsuit on her schedule of assets, the debtor violates her statutory duties.^{51} The debtor’s failure to disclose an asset decreases

---

41 Marrama, 549 U.S. at 367.
42 See Harris, 135 S. Ct. at 1835 (“A Chapter 7 trustee is then charged with selling the property in the estate and distributing the proceeds to the debtor’s creditors.” (citations omitted)).
45 11 U.S.C. § 349(b)(3) (2012) (providing that dismissal of a bankruptcy case “revests the property of the estate in the entity in which such property was vested immediately before the commencement of the case under this title”).
46 See 11 U.S.C. § 554(d) (“Unless the court orders otherwise, property of the estate that is not abandoned under this section and that is not administered in the case remains property of the estate.”); Parker v. Wendy’s Int’l, Inc., 365 F.3d 1268, 1272 (11th Cir. 2004) (“Failure to list an interest on a bankruptcy schedule leaves that interest in the bankruptcy estate.”).
47 See sources cited supra note 46.
49 OFFICIAL BANKR. FORMS, FORM B 106A/B, ¶ 33.
50 Oneida Motor Freight, Inc. v. United Jersey Bank, 848 F.2d 414, 416 (3d Cir. 1988) (“A long-standing tenet of bankruptcy law requires one seeking benefits under its terms to satisfy a companion duty to schedule, for the benefit of creditors, all his interests and property rights.”).
51 Ryan Operations G.P., 81 F.3d at 362.
the amount available for distribution to creditors and ultimately harms creditors.\textsuperscript{52} The debtor’s disclosure requirements are an essential element of the bankruptcy system.\textsuperscript{53} The bankruptcy court relies on these disclosures and “the importance of full and honest disclosure cannot be overstated.”\textsuperscript{54} If a debtor later pursues an undisclosed lawsuit in a post-bankruptcy proceeding, the non-bankruptcy court could interpret the debtor-plaintiff’s actions as being inconsistent—giving rise to judicial estoppel as a potential defense.\textsuperscript{55} When judicial estoppel arises in this context, the non-bankruptcy court must determine whether the lawsuit is property of the bankruptcy estate under state law and the Bankruptcy Code.

As in many other areas of law, timing in bankruptcy is everything. The bankruptcy estate is created the moment the debtor files a bankruptcy petition.\textsuperscript{56} When a debtor files a petition for relief under Chapter 7, the distinction between prepetition property and postpetition property is essential to determining what property becomes property of the estate.\textsuperscript{57} This distinction also becomes essential for a judicial estoppel analysis because the application of judicial estoppel is predicated on the fact that the undisclosed lawsuit should have been disclosed and is part of the bankruptcy estate.\textsuperscript{58} Only lawsuits that accrue prepetition become property of the estate.\textsuperscript{59} Although state law is important in determining the accrual date of a lawsuit, the Bankruptcy Code “is not restricted by state law concepts such as when a cause of action ripens or a statute of limitations begins to run, and ‘property of the estate’ may include claims that were inchoate on the petition date.”\textsuperscript{60} To determine if a lawsuit is part of the bankruptcy estate, a court must find that the lawsuit has “sufficient roots in the

\begin{footnotesize}
\begin{itemize}
  \item[52] See Williams v. Hainje, 375 F. App’x 625, 628 (7th Cir. 2010) (noting “the bankruptcy law’s goal of unearthing all assets for the benefit of creditors”).
  \item[53] Ryan Operations G.P., 81 F.3d at 362.
  \item[54] Id.
  \item[55] Debtors’ Counsel Beware, supra note 32, at 204.
  \item[57] See Ceja-Corona v. CVS Pharmacy, Inc., No. 1:12-CV-01703-AWI-SAB, 2014 WL 1679410, at *10 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 28, 2014) (“[I]n Chapter 7 actions, the bankruptcy estate only includes causes of action which existed as of the date the petition was filed—causes of action which accrued post-petition are not part of a Chapter 7 estate.”).
  \item[58] See id. at *11 (finding that some of the plaintiff’s claims accrued prepetition and others accrued postpetition and only applying judicial estoppel to the plaintiff’s prepetition claims).
  \item[59] See In re Strada Design Assocs., 326 B.R. at 235 (“Without doubt, causes of action that accrue under state law prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition become ‘property of the estate.’”).
  \item[60] Id. at 236.
\end{itemize}
\end{footnotesize}
debtor’s pre-bankruptcy activities and is not entangled with the debtor’s ‘fresh start,’ regardless of when the claim accrues under state law or the statute of limitations begins to run.”61

When a Chapter 7 debtor fails to disclose a post-petition lawsuit, the lawsuit is not property of the bankruptcy estate, and judicial estoppel is not an applicable ground for dismissal.62 However, when a Chapter 7 debtor fails to disclose a prepetition lawsuit, the lawsuit is property of the estate and remains part of the estate indefinitely. Therefore, if a debtor then pursues an undisclosed lawsuit in a post-bankruptcy proceeding, the lawsuit may be subject to dismissal under a judicial estoppel analysis.63

B. The Automatic Stay

The automatic stay has a broad scope and “plays a vital and fundamental role in bankruptcy.”64 When a debtor files a petition for relief, the act of filing the petition puts the automatic stay into effect under § 362(a) of the Bankruptcy Code.65 The automatic stay acts as a legislative injunction prohibiting certain actions against the debtor, property of the debtor, and property of the bankruptcy estate.66 The automatic stay also “ensures that all claims against the debtor will be brought in a single forum, the bankruptcy court.”67

The automatic stay protects the interests of debtors and creditors. One purpose of the automatic stay is to provide the debtor protection from creditors’ collection efforts.68 Another purpose is to protect “creditors as a class from the

---

61 Id.
62 See supra note 58 and accompanying text.
63 See supra note 58 and accompanying text.
64 Hillis Motors, Inc. v. Haw. Auto. Dealers’ Ass’n, 997 F.2d 581, 585 (9th Cir. 1993). The stay is designed to effect an immediate freeze of the status quo by precluding and nullifying post-petition actions, judicial or nonjudicial, in nonbankruptcy fora against the debtor or affecting the property of the estate.” Id.
(emphasis omitted). As a result, “[t]he stay ensures that all claims against the debtor will be brought in a single forum, the bankruptcy court.” Id.
65 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) (2012); Soares v. Brockton Credit Union (In re Soares), 107 F.3d 969, 975 (1st Cir.
1997) (“The stay springs into being immediately upon the filing of a bankruptcy petition . . . .”) 66 See 11 U.S.C. § 362(a) (listing actions that would violate the stay). The stay “is intended to give the debtor breathing room by ‘stop[p]ing all collection efforts, all harassment, and all foreclosure actions.’” In re 6296–97).
67 Hillis Motors, 997 F.2d at 585.
68 See In re Killmer, 501 B.R. 208, 212 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2013) (“[T]he automatic stay is often viewed as a benefit to debtors since it provides a ‘breathing spell’ from collection efforts . . . .”); see also In re Soares, 107
F.3d at 975 (“The automatic stay is among the most basic of debtor protections under bankruptcy law.”).
The automatic stay goes into effect upon filing a bankruptcy petition and stays in effect against property of the estate “until such property is no longer property of the estate.” Normally, property of the estate ceases to be property of the estate if the trustee abandons the property, the bankruptcy case is dismissed, or the trustee administers the property. However, undisclosed lawsuits remain part of the bankruptcy estate indefinitely. As a result, even after a debtor’s bankruptcy case is closed, the automatic stay continues to be in effect against undisclosed lawsuits because they remain property of the estate indefinitely.

---

69 Hillis Motors, 997 F.2d at 585; see also Sunshine Dev., Inc. v. FDIC, 33 F.3d 106, 114 (1st Cir. 1994) (“The automatic stay . . . prevent[s] different creditors from bringing different proceedings in different courts, thereby setting in motion a free-for-all in which opposing interests maneuver to capture the lion’s share of the debtor’s assets.”).

70 See 11 U.S.C. § 362(d) (“On request of a party in interest and after notice and a hearing, the court shall grant relief from the stay . . . for cause . . . .”).

71 See supra note 30 and accompanying text.

72 See Commerzanstalt v. Telewide Sys., Inc., 790 F.2d 206, 207 (2d Cir. 1986) (per curiam) (“Since the purpose of the stay is to protect creditors as well as the debtor, the debtor may not waive the automatic stay.”); see also supra notes 68–69 and accompanying text.

73 See In re Enyedi, 371 B.R. 327, 334 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 2007) (“It is well established in case law that acts taken in violation of the automatic stay imposed under section 362(a) of the Bankruptcy Code are deemed void ab initio and lack effect.”); see also In re Killmer, 501 B.R. at 212 (“[A]n act entered in violation of the stay is void whether or not a party makes a motion to declare it so.”).

75 See supra notes 44–45 and accompanying text.

76 See supra note 46 and accompanying text.

77 See 11 U.S.C. § 362(c)(1); Lopez v. Specialty Rests. Corp. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22, 32 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002) (Klein, J., concurring) (“[T]he difficulty with the judicial estoppel defense is that the automatic stay remains in effect to protect property of the estate so long as it is property of the estate, even after the bankruptcy case is closed.”).
C. Jurisdiction of Bankruptcy Courts

Bankruptcy courts are Article I courts that serve as adjuncts to the district courts. When Congress drafted the 1978 Bankruptcy Code, one of the goals was “to enlarge the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court in order to eliminate the serious delays, expense and duplications associated with the . . . dichotomy between summary and plenary jurisdiction.” Congress granted federal districts courts “original and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases under title 11.” Under 28 U.S.C. § 1334(a), “[e]ach district court may provide that any or all cases under title 11 and any or all proceedings arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11 shall be referred to the bankruptcy judges for the district.” All federal districts have adopted a local rule or standing order referring cases under Title 11 to the bankruptcy courts.

Congress also granted the federal district courts where a bankruptcy case is commenced or is pending “exclusive jurisdiction” over “all the property, wherever located, of the debtor as of the commencement of such case, and of property of the estate.” This broad grant of exclusive jurisdiction includes determinations of what property becomes property of the estate. Because an undisclosed lawsuit is property of the bankruptcy estate, the federal district court and, by referral, the bankruptcy court have exclusive jurisdiction over undisclosed lawsuits while the bankruptcy case is open.

---

78 See 28 U.S.C. § 151 (2012) (“In each judicial district, the bankruptcy judges in regular active service shall constitute a unit of the district court to be known as the bankruptcy court for that district.”); BP RE, L.P. v. RML Waxahachie Dodge, L.L.C. (In re BP RE, L.P.), 735 F.3d 279, 281 (5th Cir. 2013).
82 See Schulman v. Cal. State Water Res. Control Bd. (In re Lazar), 200 B.R. 358, 366 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1996) (“[E]ach district is authorized to adopt a general order of reference to send all bankruptcy cases to the bankruptcy judges for the district, and in fact all districts (including this district) have so ordered.”). For an example of a local rule, see D. ARIZ. R. BANKR. P. 5011-1 (“Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(a), the district court refers to the bankruptcy court for this District all cases under Title 11 and all proceedings under Title 11 or arising in or related to a case under Title 11.”).
85 See supra notes 81–83 and accompanying text.
A bankruptcy court’s jurisdiction is divided into core and non-core proceedings. Bankruptcy courts may hear and enter final judgments in “all core proceedings arising under title 11, or arising in a case under title 11.” Section 157(b)(2) of Title 28 provides sixteen non-exhaustive examples of core proceedings, including “matters concerning the administration of the estate” and “motions to terminate, annul, or modify the automatic stay.” In non-core proceedings, bankruptcy courts may only “submit proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law to the district court,” and the district court judge must enter the final order or judgment. Because an undisclosed lawsuit is property of the bankruptcy estate, administering the lawsuit is a core proceeding and bankruptcy judges may enter a final order or judgment.

The statutory provisions defining property of the estate, the automatic stay, and the bankruptcy court’s jurisdiction work in tandem to ensure that the bankruptcy court can adequately protect the interests of debtors and creditors. Because undisclosed lawsuits are property of the estate, consideration of each of these provisions is necessary to properly address the role of judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context.

II. THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE JUDICIAL ESTOPPEL DOCTRINE

The judicial estoppel doctrine can be traced back to the Tennessee Supreme Court’s 1857 decision in Hamilton v. Zimmerman. The majority of federal and state courts have since adopted judicial estoppel with the aim of “protect[ing] the integrity of the judicial process.” When a court applies judicial estoppel, it prevents the party from adopting inconsistent positions in different proceedings. This doctrine is intended to preserve the integrity of the judicial process and prevent parties from taking advantage of earlier statements.

---

86 See 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(3) (“The bankruptcy judge shall determine . . . whether a proceeding is a core proceeding under this subsection or is a proceeding that is otherwise related to a case under title 11.”).
90 See Johnson v. Lewis Cass Intermediate Sch. Dist. (In re Johnson), 345 B.R. 816, 818 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 2006). In In re Johnson, the district court referred a debtor’s wrongful discharge claim to the bankruptcy court after the defendant had filed for summary judgment on the basis of judicial estoppel. Id. at 818–19. The bankruptcy court found that the adversary proceeding was a core proceeding because it involved “the administration of the debtor’s estate and affect[ed] the liquidation of the assets of the estate and the debtor-creditor relationships.” Id. at 818 (citations omitted).
91 See 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 39, 49 (1857) (dismissing a case because the plaintiff had made inconsistent statements); Brian A. Dodd, Intent and the Application of Judicial Estoppel: Equitable Shield or Judicial Heartbreak?, 22 AM. J. TRIAL ADVOC. 481, 481 (1998) (discussing the development of judicial estoppel).
92 See Dodd, supra note 91 (discussing the application of judicial estoppel in state and federal courts).
93 Edwards v. Aetna Life Ins., 690 F.2d 595, 598 (6th Cir. 1982). “The essential function of judicial estoppel is to prevent intentional inconsistency, the object of the rule is to protect the judiciary, as an institution, from the perversion of judicial machinery.” Id. at 599. The underlying policy considerations behind judicial estoppel are to maintain the integrity of the judicial process and prevent parties from taking advantage of earlier statements.”
Although judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine, its application can prove harsh when used against a litigant who had no intention of undermining the integrity of the courts or gaining an advantage. The extent to which a court considers the litigant’s intent has caused “great division among the jurisdictions.” This Part first discusses the goals of judicial estoppel and the judicial estoppel factors delineated by the Supreme Court in New Hampshire v. Maine. It then analyzes how federal courts apply judicial estoppel and identifies the resulting inequities and inconsistencies. This Part concludes by discussing issues that arise when state courts apply judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context.

A. The Judicial Estoppel Doctrine and Its Goals

Courts emphasize different purposes in applying the judicial estoppel doctrine, and they also recognize that judicial estoppel cannot be reduced to a strict formula. In 2001, the Supreme Court of the United States elaborated on the judicial estoppel doctrine for the first time in New Hampshire v. Maine. The Court determined that the predominant purpose of judicial estoppel is “to protect the integrity of the judicial process” by “prohibiting parties from deliberately changing positions according to the exigencies of the moment.”

The Court identified three factors that “typically inform the decision whether to apply the doctrine in a particular case.” The first factor is whether “a party’s later position [is] ‘clearly inconsistent’ with its earlier position.” The second factor is “whether the party has succeeded in persuading a court to accept that party’s earlier position, so that judicial acceptance of an inconsistent position in a later proceeding would create ‘the perception that either the first or the second court was misled.’” The third factor is “whether the party seeking to assert an inconsistent position would derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party if not estopped.” The Supreme Court noted that these factors are not meant to “establish inflexible prerequisites or an exhaustive formula for determining the applicability of judicial estoppel.” Every federal circuit and some state courts apply the Maine factors.

The Supreme Court’s decision in New Hampshire v. Maine was a starting point for clarifying the doctrine of judicial estoppel. However, the Court left many issues untouched and open to interpretation by the lower courts, including the issue of the litigant’s intent. Judicial estoppel has continued to evolve in federal and state courts, resulting in varied interpretations that reflect the doctrine’s flexible standard and origin as a common-law doctrine that courts may invoke at their discretion. The court applying judicial estoppel must decide whether the judicial estoppel factors are met by interpreting circumstances from litigation in the first court, which leads to increased variability and possible error.

Some courts have recognized that judicial estoppel is a harsh doctrine that should be used only in extraordinary circumstances. Despite this recognition, non-bankruptcy courts regularly apply judicial estoppel to undisclosed lawsuits.

---

104 Id. (quoting Edwards v. Aetna Life Ins., 690 F.2d 595, 599 (6th Cir. 1982)).
105 Id. at 751.
106 Id.
108 See Wright et al., supra note 98, § 4477 (“Judicial estoppel is not so much a single doctrine as a set of doctrines that have not matured into fully coherent theory.”); see also New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 751 (“Additional considerations may inform the doctrine’s application in specific factual contexts.”). The Supreme Court noted in New Hampshire v. Maine that “it may be appropriate to resist application of judicial estoppel ‘when a party’s prior position was based on inadvertence or mistake.’” Id. at 753.
109 See infra Part II.B–C.
110 See Debtors’ Counsel Beware, supra note 32, at 202 (noting that when two different courts are involved, “there is room for interpretation, perhaps error, as to whether the position taken in the original court was actually, or sufficiently, adopted, so as to justify the doctrine’s use”).
111 E.g., Montrose Med. Grp. Participating Sav. Plan v. Bulger, 243 F.3d 773, 784 (3d Cir. 2001) (“Judicial estoppel ‘is an “extraordinary remedy”’ that should be employed only ‘when a party’s inconsistent behavior would otherwise result in a miscarriage of justice.’ . . . [J]udicial estoppel ‘is often the harshest remedy’ that a court can impose for inequitable conduct . . . .’” (citations omitted) (emphasis added)); Lowery v. Stovall, 92 F.3d 219, 224 (4th Cir. 1996) (“Because of the harsh results attendant with precluding a party from asserting a position that would normally be available to the party, judicial estoppel must be applied with caution.”).
from bankruptcy without considering other options. Non-bankruptcy courts may be attracted to judicial estoppel because it offers a simple solution to a complicated legal situation. What is evident is that the use of judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context has resulted in inequitable decisions as well as discord throughout federal and state jurisdictions.

B. Federal Courts’ Application of Judicial Estoppel

Every federal court of appeals that has addressed the application of judicial estoppel to an undisclosed lawsuit from bankruptcy has found that “judicial estoppel is justified to bar a debtor from pursuing a cause of action in district court where that debtor deliberately fails to disclose the pending suit in a bankruptcy case.” However, the circuits split on three important issues involving judicial estoppel: the appropriate standard of review, application of the Maine factors, and whether state or federal law applies when sitting in diversity.

1. The Appropriate Standard of Review

To begin, the courts of appeals do not agree on the standard of review when reviewing a grant of summary judgment decided on judicial estoppel grounds. Although a grant of summary judgment is usually reviewed de novo, the First, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Circuits apply the abuse

---

112 See William H. Burgess, Dismissing Bankruptcy-Debtor Plaintiffs’ Cases on Judicial Estoppel Grounds, Fed. Law., May 2015, at 54, 55. (“This issue—whether to judicially estop a plaintiff from continuing to prosecute a lawsuit that was not disclosed in bankruptcy—appears to arise several times each week in the federal and state courts.”); see also Christopher Klein, Lawrence Ponoroff & Sarah Borrey, Principles of Preclusion and Estoppel in Bankruptcy Cases, 79 Am. Bankr. L.J. 839, 884 (2005) (commenting on the “beguiling lure of judicial estoppel” in the undisclosed lawsuit context and noting that “succumb[ing] to the allure of this position . . . has usually led to a dismissal of the action in a manner that contradicts the maxim that equity will not do inequity—the resulting inequity being that creditors are punished for the debtor’s omission”).

113 See, e.g., White v. Wyndham Vacation Ownership, Inc., 617 F.3d 472, 474, 484 (6th Cir. 2010) (affirming the application of judicial estoppel to an undisclosed lawsuit).

114 Id. (noting that judicial estoppel harms innocent creditors).

115 See infra Part II.B–C.

116 Id.

118 See Jay v. Saporto, 541 F. App’x 71, 72 n.1 (2d Cir. 2013) (“[C]ircuits are split as to whether dismissal on grounds of judicial estoppel should be reviewed de novo . . . .”); cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 2305 (2014); see also Stallings v. Hussmann Corp., 447 F.3d 1041, 1046 (8th Cir. 2006) (applying the abuse of discretion standard). But see United States v. Hook, 195 F.3d 299, 305 (7th Cir. 1999) (applying de novo standard of review).

119 See Dunn v. Advanced Med. Specialties, Inc., 556 F. App’x 785, 788 (11th Cir. 2014) (“[A]n order granting summary judgment typically is subject to de novo review . . . .”).
of discretion standard when reviewing a grant of summary judgment based on judicial estoppel. The Second, Sixth, Seventh, and D.C. Circuits apply a de novo standard of review when reviewing a grant of summary judgment based on judicial estoppel.

2. Applying the Maine Factors in the Undisclosed Lawsuit Context

Federal courts also disagree on how to apply the Maine factors. Following the Supreme Court’s decision in New Hampshire v. Maine, federal courts began attempting to apply the factors according to the Court’s instruction that the factors “do not establish inflexible prerequisites or an exhaustive formula for determining the applicability of judicial estoppel.” Despite this explicit instruction, some federal courts apply the Maine factors to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy in a strict, formulaic way.

The Maine factors are often satisfied in a typical case involving an undisclosed lawsuit. The first Maine factor focuses on whether the debtor has taken inconsistent positions. In reviewing the first factor, courts often find that factor is satisfied because the debtor failed to disclose a prepetition lawsuit. In EEOC v. CRST Van Expedited, Inc., the Eighth Circuit reviewed a district court’s application of the Maine factors to a debtor’s failure to disclose an employment discrimination claim. The Eighth Circuit found that “in the bankruptcy context, a party may be judicially estopped from asserting a cause of 120 See Ah Quin v. Cty. of Kauai Dep’t of Transp., 733 F.3d 267, 270 (9th Cir. 2013); Love v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 677 F.3d 258, 262 (5th Cir. 2012); Robinson v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 595 F.3d 1269, 1273 (11th Cir. 2010); Eastman v. Union Pac. R.R., 493 F.3d 1151, 1156 (10th Cir. 2007); Stallings, 447 F.3d at 1046; Nat’l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh v. Mfrs. & Traders Trust Co., 137 F. App’x 529, 530 (4th Cir. 2005); Alternative Sys. Concepts, Inc. v. Synopsys, Inc., 374 F.3d 23, 30 (1st Cir. 2004); McNemar v. Disney Store, Inc., 91 F.3d 610, 616–17 (3d Cir. 1996).

---

121 See, e.g., Lia, 541 F. App’x at 72 n.1; Solomon v. Vilsack, 628 F.3d 555, 561 (D.C. Cir. 2010); Eubanks v. CBKS Fin. Grp., 385 F.3d 894, 897 (6th Cir. 2004); Hook, 195 F.3d at 305.

122 New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 751 (2001); see also, e.g., Ah Quin, 733 F.3d at 270 (applying the Maine factors); EEOC v. CRST Van Expedited, Inc., 679 F.3d 657, 679 (8th Cir.) (applying the Maine factors), reh’g denied (8th Cir. 2012); Robinson, 595 F.3d at 1273 (applying the Maine factors).

123 See Ah Quin, 733 F.3d at 271 (“In the bankruptcy context, the federal courts have developed a basic default rule: If a plaintiff-debtor omits a pending (or soon-to-be-filed) lawsuit from the bankruptcy schedules and obtains a discharge (or plan confirmation), judicial estoppel bars the action.” (emphasis added)).

124 See, e.g., Ibok v. SIAC-Sector Inc., 470 F. App’x 27, 28 (2d Cir. 2012) (noting that judicial estoppel “is commonly applied in order ‘to prevent a party who failed to disclose a claim in bankruptcy proceedings from asserting that claim after emerging from bankruptcy’”); Love, 677 F.3d at 261–62 (noting that that judicial estoppel is “particularly appropriate” in the undisclosed lawsuit from bankruptcy context).

125 New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750.

126 CRST Van Expedited, Inc., 679 F.3d at 679.

127 Id. at 679–80.
action’ . . . because ‘a debtor’s failure to list a claim in the mandatory bankruptcy filings is tantamount to a representation that no such claim existed.’”128

The second Maine factor focuses on whether the bankruptcy court accepted the debtor’s inconsistent position.129 Courts may find that the second factor is satisfied when a Chapter 7 debtor receives a full discharge in bankruptcy.130 In CRST Van Expedited, Inc., the Eighth Circuit found that the second factor “might be satisfied ‘where the bankruptcy court issues a “no asset” discharge,’ thereby evidencing that ‘the bankruptcy court has effectively adopted the debtor’s position.’”131

The third Maine factor focuses on whether the debtor gains an unfair advantage.132 Under this third factor, courts often conclude that not disclosing a claim in bankruptcy gives the debtor an unfair advantage over his creditors.133 In Moses v. Howard University Hospital, the D.C. Circuit found that by filing a lawsuit “without disclosing it in his bankruptcy proceedings, [the debtor] set up a situation in which he could gain an advantage over his creditors.”134

In addition to the Maine factors, federal courts may consider the debtor’s motive in concealing the claim by determining whether the debtor’s failure to disclose the lawsuit was a result of inadvertence or mistake.135 The federal courts discuss the issue of a good-faith mistake either under the third Maine factor136 or as a separate consideration.137 In CRST Van Expedited, Inc., the Eighth Circuit stressed that “a district court should not judicially estop a debtor whose prior

---

128 Id.
129 New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750.
130 E.g., CRST Van Expedited, Inc., 679 F.3d at 679.
131 Id.
132 Id.
133 E.g., Moses v. Howard Univ. Hosp., 606 F.3d 789, 799 (D.C. Cir. 2010). The First Circuit does not require a showing of unfair advantage; however, where courts find an unfair advantage, the First Circuit considers this a strong factor in favor of applying judicial estoppel. Guay v. Burack, 677 F.3d 10, 16–17 (1st Cir. 2012).
134 Moses, 606 F.3d at 799.
135 E.g., Love v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 677 F.3d 258, 262 (5th Cir. 2012). The Supreme Court recognized that “it may be appropriate to resist application of judicial estoppel ‘when a party’s prior position was based on inadvertence or mistake.’” New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 753 (quoting John S. Clark Co. v. Faggert & Frieden, P.C., 65 F.3d 26, 29 (4th Cir. 1995)). Courts also discuss the debtor’s mistake in not disclosing a claim in terms of good or bad faith. CRST Van Expedited, Inc., 679 F.3d at 680 (finding “no evidence of any such good-faith error or omission”).
136 E.g., CRST Van Expedited, Inc., 679 F.3d at 680.
137 E.g., Ah Quin v. Cty. of Kauai Dep’t of Transp., 733 F.3d 267, 271 (9th Cir. 2013) (discussing the debtor’s inadvertence or mistake separate from the three Maine factors).
inconsistent position was attributable to ‘a good-faith mistake rather than as part of a scheme to mislead the court.’”

In addressing whether the mistake was made in good faith, some circuits apply a presumption of intentional manipulation when a debtor fails to disclose a claim in his bankruptcy case. The Tenth Circuit reasoned that there is an “ever present motive to conceal legal claims and reap the financial rewards,” which “undoubtedly is why so many of the cases applying judicial estoppel involve debtors-turned-plaintiffs who have failed to disclose such claims in bankruptcy.” The Ninth Circuit recognizes this presumption and allows a “narrow exception for good faith” when the debtor has not reopened his bankruptcy case to amend his schedules. The Fifth Circuit has similarly found that debtors have a motive to conceal because they stand to receive a windfall by not disclosing the claim in bankruptcy. The Tenth Circuit has agreed with this presumption and found that a debtor’s failure to disclose a claim in bankruptcy can only be deemed a mistake when the debtor has no knowledge of the claim or has no motive to conceal the claim.

Federal courts’ application of the Maine factors and other considerations often results in reducing judicial estoppel to a checklist or default rule when the 138 CRST Van Expedited, Inc., 679 F.3d at 680 (quoting Stallings v. Hussmann Corp., 447 F.3d 1041, 1049 (8th Cir. 2006)) (finding that there was no evidence that the debtor’s mistake was made in good faith and holding that the district court did not abuse its discretion in judicially estopping the debtors’ claims).

---

139 E.g., Ah Quin, 733 F.3d at 272–73 (9th Cir. 2013) (“In sum, given the strong need for full disclosure in bankruptcy proceedings and the fact that the plaintiff-debtor received an unfair advantage in the bankruptcy court, it makes sense to apply a presumption of deliberate manipulation.”); Love, 677 F.3d at 262; Eastman v. Union Pac. R.R., 493 F.3d 1151, 1159 (10th Cir. 2007). The Ninth Circuit in Ah Quin distinguished the situation where the debtor had successfully reopened her bankruptcy case and amended her bankruptcy schedules because in such a situation, “two of the three primary New Hampshire factors are no longer met.” 733 F.3d at 274. Accordingly, when a debtor reopens her bankruptcy case and amends her schedules, the Ninth Circuit does not apply “a presumption of deceit.” Id. at 276 (emphasis omitted). It instead “requires an inquiry into whether the plaintiff’s bankruptcy filing was, in fact, inadvertent or mistaken, as those terms are commonly understood.” Id.

140 Ah Quin, 733 F.3d at 272.

141 Love, 677 F.3d at 262 (“[T]he motivation sub-element is almost always met if a debtor fails to disclose a claim or possible claim to the bankruptcy court. Motivation in this context is self-evident because of potential financial benefit resulting from the nondisclosure.” (quoting Thompson v. Sanderson Farms, Inc., No. 3:04CV837-WHB-JCS, 2006 WL 7089989, at *4 (S.D. Miss. May 31, 2006))).

142 Queen v. TA Operating, LLC, 734 F.3d 1081, 1093–94 (10th Cir. 2013) (“[I]t was to [the debtors’] benefit to conceal the claim so that they could receive a full discharge in bankruptcy before proceeding with the lawsuit, because this would allow them to pursue an award for damages without the risk that any of the award would go to their creditors.”).
case involves an undisclosed lawsuit from bankruptcy. Some federal courts have recognized alternatives to judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context. For example, in Willess v. United States, the Tenth Circuit found that the trustee was the real party in interest and did not dismiss the debtor-plaintiff’s lawsuit on judicial estoppel grounds. However, other federal courts continue to apply judicial estoppel without regard to possible alternatives.

Some circuits that apply judicial estoppel strictly now face dissenting opinions on this issue. In Robinson v. District of Columbia, a district court within the D.C. Circuit recently recognized that “alternative mechanisms exist to more equitably protect the integrity of the bankruptcy system (and prevent undue benefit to the debtor) than the harsh rule imposed by judicial estoppel as generally construed.” However, the Court could not adopt this approach because it was bound by precedent. In Robinson v. Tyson Foods, Judge Anderson expressed concern over the Eleventh Circuit’s test for judicial estoppel, fearing that the Circuit had “created an inflexible formula for ‘inadvertence’ that prevents courts from thoroughly examining all of the circumstances of a particular case.” Judge Anderson concurred in the judgment because he “believe[d] [he was] bound to do so by precedent.” Most 144 See Ah Quin, 733 F.3d at 271 (9th Cir. 2013) (noting that “the federal courts have developed a basic default rule” in the undisclosed lawsuit context); see also Lupian v. Cent. Valley Residential Builders, L.P., No. 10CV2270-LAB (WVG), 2014 WL 465445, at *4 (S.D. Cal. Feb. 5, 2014) (“There’s no doubt that, as a general rule, a debtor who neglects to disclose a contingent and unliquidated claim in a bankruptcy petition is judicially estopped from pursuing that claim after being discharged from bankruptcy.”); Rivera v. JPMorgan Chase Bank (In re Rivera), No. 13-14351-BFK, 2014 WL 287517, at *4 (Bankr. E.D. Va. Jan. 27, 2014) (“Where a debtor fails to list a potential claim, and fails to amend her Schedules when the claim becomes known, the first three elements of judicial estoppel are generally met.”).

---

145 See Willess v. United States, 560 F. App’x 762, 764 (10th Cir.) (finding that the trustee of the bankruptcy estate is the real party in interest and that the debtor lacks standing to bring the claim), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 202, reh’g denied, 135 S. Ct. 746 (2014); Gallagher v. Makowski, No. 13-1103 (JEI/AMD), 2014 WL 1296431, at *5 (D.N.J. Mar. 28, 2014) (finding that judicial estoppel was not appropriate and that “[t]he Trustee may elect to pursue this claim or he may not,” but “[i]f the Trustee chooses to abandon the claim, then [the plaintiff] may continue to pursue the claim in her own right”).

146 Willess, 560 F. App’x at 764.

147 See e.g., White v. Wyndham Vacation Ownership, Inc., 617 F.3d 472, 474, 484 (6th Cir. 2010) (affirming the application of judicial estoppel to an undisclosed lawsuit without considering any alternatives). In White, Judge Clay noted “[t]he majority’s approach to this case fails to appreciate the absurdity of the result of its erroneous application of judicial estoppel.” Id. at 484 (Clay, J., dissenting).

148 See e.g., supra note 147.

150 See id. (noting that the Court could not hold that reopening the bankruptcy proceeding would cure the debtor’s wrongful non-disclosure due to precedent).

152 Id. at 1278 (Anderson, J., concurring).
recently, in Slater v. U.S. Steel Corp., Judge Tjoflat wrote a lengthy concurrence encouraging the Eleventh Circuit to reconsider en banc its judicial estoppel doctrine in the undisclosed lawsuit context.153

3. Choice of Law when Sitting in Diversity

The federal circuits also disagree on whether to apply state or federal judicial estoppel standards when sitting in diversity.154 In cases involving an undisclosed lawsuit from bankruptcy, some cases are heard in federal court based on federal question jurisdiction,155 and other cases are based on diversity jurisdiction.156 The Eighth and Eleventh Circuits apply state standards of judicial estoppel when the jurisdiction of the case is based on diversity.157 The Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, and D.C. Circuits apply federal judicial estoppel standards when the jurisdiction of the case is based on diversity.158 The First and Second Circuits have not decided whether to apply federal or state standards of judicial estoppel, but district courts in both circuits have applied federal law.159

---

153 Supra note 24 and accompanying text.

154 See G-I Holdings, Inc. v. Reliance Ins., 586 F.3d 247, 261 (3d Cir. 2009) (applying federal judicial estoppel standards in a diversity case); Rissetto v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local 343, 94 F.3d 597, 602–04 (9th Cir. 1996) (discussing whether federal circuits apply state or federal judicial estoppel standards in a diversity case); Monterey Dev. Corp. v. Lawyer’s Title Ins., 4 F.3d 605, 608 (8th Cir. 1993) (applying state judicial estoppel standards in a diversity case).

156 See, e.g., G-I Holdings, Inc., 586 F.3d at 253 (“The District Court had diversity jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332 . . . .”).

157 E.g., Spencer v. Annett Holdings, Inc., 757 F.3d 790, 797 (8th Cir. 2014); Original Appalachian Artworks, Inc. v. S. Diamond Associates, 44 F.3d 925, 930 (11th Cir. 1995).

159 See, e.g., Alternative Sys. Concepts, Inc. v. Synopsys, Inc., 374 F.3d 23, 32 (1st Cir. 2004). In Alternative Sys. Concepts, the First Circuit applied federal standards of judicial estoppel because the parties agreed about what law to apply, but also noted that it “would likely reach this same conclusion even without the parties’ acquiescent behavior.” Id. The First Circuit noted that “[i]t has long been held that federal courts may bypass conflicting state rules of decision in favor of federal standards when positive considerations, such as the presence of a strong federal policy, militate in favor of employing federal standards.” Id. District courts in the Second Circuit have applied federal judicial estoppel law under the impression that the Second Circuit Court of Appeals had previously ruled on the matter. See, e.g., Laskowski v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins., No. 5:11-CV-340 (GLS/ATB), 2012 WL 2120089, at *3 n.6 (N.D.N.Y. June 11, 2012) (citing Stichting Ter Behartiging Van de Belangen Van Oudaandeelhouders In Het Kapitaal Van Saybolt Int’l B.V. v. Schreiber, 407 F.3d 34, 45 (2d Cir. 2005)) (finding that the Second Circuit “has endorsed the application of the federal judicial estoppel doctrine to diversity cases”).
The circuits that apply federal law often do so because judicial estoppel is meant to protect the integrity of the judicial system, and “federal courts must be free to develop principles that most adequately serve their institutional interests.” The circuits applying federal law also find that “the interests of the second court are uniquely implicated and threatened by the taking of an incompatible position,” which is “quite a strong ‘affirmative countervailing consideration’ of federal policy weighing in favor of the application of federal law.” When a federal court sitting in diversity applies judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context, federal policies weigh heavily in favor of applying federal law because both courts implicated in the analysis are federal.

Although federal courts that apply federal law have supported their position, the circuits that apply state law have done so without much explanation. The Eighth Circuit first applied state judicial estoppel standards in Monterey Development Corp. v. Lawyer’s Title Insurance, finding that because the court was sitting in diversity, “[i]t must apply the substantive law of Missouri.” The Eighth Circuit continues to follow its precedent in Monterey Development Corp. without elaborating on its decision to use state judicial estoppel standards. In the Eleventh Circuit, the application of state law judicial estoppel standards has

---

160 Edwards v. Aetna Life Ins., 690 F.2d 595, 598 n.4 (6th Cir.1982); see also Ryan Operations G.P. v. Santiam-Midwest Lumber Co., 81 F.3d 355, 358 n.2 (3d Cir. 1996) (“A federal court’s ability to protect itself from manipulation by litigants should not vary according to the law of the state in which the underlying dispute arose.”).

161 Rissetto, 94 F.3d at 604 (quoting Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Elec. Coop., 356 U.S. 525, 537 (1958)). The federal court “is the court where the judicial estoppel defense arises” and also “the court interested in protecting its process.” Eastman, 493 F.3d at 1156.

162 See Alternative Sys. Concepts, Inc., 374 F.3d at 32 (“Where . . . both the putatively estopping conduct and the putatively estopped conduct occur in a federal case, a federal court has a powerful institutional interest in applying federally-developed principles to protect itself against cynical manipulations.”); Hall, 327 F.3d at 395–96 (“[T]he application of federal law concerning judicial estoppel is appropriate in this case because both suits filed by Hall ended up in federal court and it is the federal court that is subject to manipulation and in need of protection.”).

163 See Original Appalachian Artworks, Inc. v. S. Diamond Assocs., 44 F.3d 925, 930 (11th Cir. 1995) (stating without explanation that when sitting in diversity, “the application of the doctrine of judicial estoppel is governed by state law”); Monterey Dev. Corp. v. Lawyer’s Title Ins., 4 F.3d 605, 608 (8th Cir. 1993).

164 See Monterey Dev. Corp., 4 F.3d at 608.

165 See Occidental Fire & Cas. Co. v. Soczewski, 765 F.3d 931, 935 n.3 (8th Cir. 2014) (citing Monterey Dev. Corp., 4 F.3d at 608–09) (“Courts in our circuit are bound to apply state law elements of judicial estoppel in a diversity case.”); Spencer v. Amnett Holdings, Inc., 757 F.3d 790, 797 (8th Cir. 2014) (citing Monterey Dev. Corp., 4 F.3d at 608–09) (finding that the Eighth Circuit’s “precedent calls for the application of state law elements of judicial estoppel in diversity cases”).
caused even more confusion because Georgia state courts find that federal law governs when applying judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context.\footnote{166 See Thompson v. Quarles, 392 B.R. 517, 526 n.10 (S.D. Ga. 2008). In Thompson, the District Court for the Southern District of Georgia noted that it was “in something of a legal quandary regarding the application of the judicial estoppel doctrine” because “in cases involving debtors with unscheduled causes of action, the Georgia state courts take the view that judicial estoppel is a federal doctrine.” Id.}

\section*{C. State Courts’ Application of Judicial Estoppel}

The application of judicial estoppel to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy has become more popular in state courts over the past fifteen years. Before 2001, courts in twenty-five states had applied judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context.\footnote{167 See supra note 32, at 228–42 (surveying state courts’ application of judicial estoppel).} Since 2001, thirteen additional states and the District of Columbia have applied judicial estoppel in this context.\footnote{168 See Debtors’ Counsel Beware, supra note 32, at 228–42 (surveying state courts’ application of judicial estoppel).} Despite the growing popularity, Vermont state courts do not recognize the doctrine of judicial estoppel in any context.\footnote{169 See supra note 11.} This section first discusses the varying judicial estoppel doctrines adopted by state courts and the choice of law issue in the undisclosed lawsuit context. It then analyzes the jurisdictional issue that arises if the debtor-plaintiff’s bankruptcy case is pending.

\subsection*{1. Judicial Estoppel and Choice of Law}

Although most state courts have their own doctrine of judicial estoppel,\footnote{170 See, e.g., Dupwe, 140 S.W.3d at 471. After a detailed discussion of the doctrine of judicial estoppel, the Supreme Court of Arkansas found that the doctrine was “merely a continuation of existing law previously set out under the doctrine against inconsistent positions.” Id.} many of those state courts’ judicial estoppel doctrines are informed by federal law. For example, in Ex parte First Alabama Bank, the Supreme Court of Alabama “embrace[d] the factors set forth in New Hampshire v. Maine and join[ed] the mainstream of jurisprudence in dealing with the doctrine of judicial estoppel.”

Most state courts apply their state law doctrine of judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context. When state courts apply judicial estoppel to federal claims, they confront similar issues that federal courts face when sitting in diversity and handling state law claims. Like the majority of federal circuits, the Supreme Court of Alabama found that state law should govern because “[t]he primary purpose of the doctrine of judicial estoppel is to protect the integrity of [the state’s] judicial system.” Only five state courts have explicitly applied federal law in the undisclosed lawsuit context.

2. Jurisdictional Issue in the Undisclosed Lawsuit Context

A potential issue with state courts applying judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context is one of jurisdiction. Under 28 U.S.C. § 1334(e)(1), the federal district court and, by referral, the bankruptcy court, have exclusive jurisdiction over property of the debtor and property of the 171 See Vincent v. First Ala. Bank (Ex parte First Ala. Bank), 883 So. 2d 1236, 1244 (Ala. 2003) (applying the Maine factors); see also Ass’n Res., Inc. v. Wall, 2 A.3d 873, 890–91 (Conn. 2010) (turning “for guidance to the significant body of federal case law addressing this doctrine”).

---

172 Ex parte First Ala. Bank, 883 So. 2d at 1246.

173 See, e.g., Verde Valley Placa, LLC, 2015 WL 5084111, at *4 (applying the Arizona judicial estoppel doctrine in the undisclosed lawsuit context); Gottlieb v. Kest, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 7, 19 (Cal. Ct. App.) (applying the California judicial estoppel doctrine in the omitted asset context), review denied (Cal. 2006).

174 See Middleton v. Caterpillar Indus., 979 So. 2d 53, 58 (Ala. 2007). The Supreme Court of Alabama noted that “[t]he issue whether the doctrine of judicial estoppel is substantive or procedural in nature has arisen most often in cases where federal courts have applied state law under the Erie doctrine.” Id.

175 Id. at 60.

176 See IBF Participating Income Fund v. Dillard-Winecoff, LLC, 573 S.E.2d 58, 59 (Ga. 2002) (“Georgia appellate courts historically have striven to apply the ‘federal’ doctrine of judicial estoppel, in an effort ‘to afford the judgment of the bankruptcy court the same effect here as would result in the court where that judgment was rendered.’” (quoting Southmark Corp. v. Trotter, Smith & Jacobs, 442 S.E.2d 265, 266 (Ga. Ct. App. 1994))); Miller v. Conagra, Inc., 991 So. 2d 445, 452 (La. 2008); Kirk v. Pope, 973 So. 2d 981, 991 (Miss. 2007); Dallas Sales Co. v. Carlisle Silver Co., 134 S.W.3d 928, 931 (Tex. App. 2004) (“[T]he federal law of judicial estoppel applies in a case in which the prior proceeding was in federal bankruptcy court.”); Omegbu v. Nicholson, 698 N.W.2d 132, ¶ 11 (Wis. 2005) (“[B]ecause the argument for judicial estoppel arose in the context of Omegbu’s bankruptcy petition, federal law presumably applies.”).

177 See Debtors’ Counsel Beware, supra note 32, at 215 (“[S]tate court practices raise a question regarding whether those state courts strictly applying judicial estoppel have the authority to determine whether a claim of the debtor is property of the bankruptcy estate. Although determinations of estate property often turn upon state law issues, typically it is the bankruptcy court that decides what comprises property of the bankruptcy estate.” (footnote omitted)).
estate. Although “[s]tate law normally determines the extent of the debtor’s interest in property[;] . . . [b]ankruptcy law determines whether that interest is property of the estate.” When courts apply judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context, their application of the doctrine is predicated on the fact that the undisclosed lawsuit is property of the estate. In the event that the debtor’s bankruptcy case is still pending or has been reopened, the state court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to determine whether a claim is property of a bankruptcy estate. Moreover, if a bankruptcy case is open or pending, state courts lack jurisdiction over assets that are property of the estate; therefore, state courts may not dismiss a lawsuit that is property of the estate on any ground—including judicial estoppel.

III. ALTERNATIVES TO JUDICIAL ESTOPPEL

Non-bankruptcy courts do not always turn to judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context. This Part considers alternative approaches to judicial estoppel in the undisclosed lawsuit context and how they may create the same inequitable results as judicial estoppel. First, this Part discusses the issue of a debtor-plaintiff’s lack of standing to pursue a lawsuit not disclosed in bankruptcy. This Part then explores the option of reopening a debtor-plaintiff’s bankruptcy case to amend her bankruptcy schedules.

180 See, e.g., Haley v. Dow Lewis Motors, Inc., 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 358 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999) (considering whether the undisclosed lawsuit was property of the estate before applying judicial estoppel).
181 See John Knox Vill. v. Fortis Constr. Co., 449 S.W.3d 68, 75 (Mo. Ct. App.), reh’g denied, transfer denied (Mo. Ct. App. 2014). In John Knox Village, the appellants asked a Missouri court of appeals to determine that the appellee’s claim was property of a bankruptcy estate. Id. The court found that it had “no authority to make such a finding” because “the bankruptcy court ‘has exclusive jurisdiction to decide whether certain property is property of the bankruptcy estate.’” Id. (quoting True v. True (In re True), 285 B.R. 405, 412 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2002) (emphasis omitted).
182 See 28 U.S.C. § 1334(e)(1) (granting federal courts “exclusive jurisdiction” over property of the estate); see also State ex rel. Laughlin v. Bowersox, 318 S.W.3d 695, 698 (Mo. 2010) (en banc) (“[N]o state . . . can grant subject matter jurisdiction to its courts to hear matters that federal law places under the ‘exclusive’ jurisdiction of the federal courts.”).
A. The Debtor Is Not the Real Party in Interest

Standing “is the threshold question in every federal case, determining the power of the court to entertain the suit.”183 Standing is a jurisdictional requirement that can be reviewed at any time throughout the litigation of a claim.184 To meet this requirement, a plaintiff “must assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties.”185 Related to standing is the question of who may bring a lawsuit in federal court. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(a) provides that “[a]n action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.”186 In this context, some courts have concluded that the Chapter 7 trustee, not the debtor-plaintiff, is the real party in interest.187 Defendants have argued for dismissal under both the judicial estoppel doctrine and the debtor-plaintiff’s lack of standing.188

The Chapter 7 trustee is the real party in interest in the undisclosed lawsuit context. Section 541 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that nearly all of a debtor’s prepetition assets vest in the bankruptcy estate as of the commencement of a case.189 Any undisclosed lawsuit becomes part of the bankruptcy estate and remains a part of the bankruptcy estate post-bankruptcy.190 When an asset becomes part of the bankruptcy estate, the debtor no longer has rights in that asset unless the asset is abandoned under § 554 of the Bankruptcy Code or the case is dismissed.191 Section 323 of the Bankruptcy Code confers upon the trustee, as “the representative of the estate,” the power “to sue and be sued.”192 Thus, the debtor is not the real party in interest to pursue an undisclosed

---

185 Warth, 422 U.S. at 499.
187 E.g., Parker v. Wendy’s Int’l, Inc., 365 F.3d 1268, 1272 (11th Cir. 2004).
188 See, e.g., Longaker v. Boston Sci. Corp., 715 F.3d 658, 660 (8th Cir. 2013) (“Boston Scientific moved to dismiss Longaker’s complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6), arguing that Longaker lacked standing to bring either claim, [and] that judicial estoppel barred the breach of contract claim . . . .”).
189 See Parker, 365 F.3d at 1272 (“Section 541 of the Bankruptcy Code provides that virtually all of a debtor’s assets, both tangible and intangible, vest in the bankruptcy estate upon the filing of a bankruptcy petition.”).
190 See supra notes 43–46 and accompanying text.
191 See supra notes 44–45 and accompanying text.
lawsuit\textsuperscript{194} because the trustee “is the proper party in interest, and is the only party with standing to prosecute causes of action belonging to the estate.”\textsuperscript{195}

Under this rationale, courts have determined that the debtor-plaintiff “lacks standing” to bring the lawsuit\textsuperscript{196} and dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction is the appropriate solution.\textsuperscript{197} Because courts have characterized this dismissal as a dismissal for lack of standing,\textsuperscript{198} courts have also overlooked the inherent protection of Federal Rule 17 in preventing dismissal of the claim if the real party in interest has not been given an opportunity to intervene.\textsuperscript{199} Federal Rule 17(a)(3) provides that a “court may not dismiss an action for failure to prosecute in the name of the real party in interest until, after an objection, a reasonable time has been allowed for the real party in interest to ratify, join, or be substituted into the action.”\textsuperscript{200} Where a debtor-plaintiff’s bankruptcy case has been closed, the debtor must move the bankruptcy court to reopen her bankruptcy case and then request that the court appoint a trustee who could then intervene in the lawsuit. However, if the non-bankruptcy court dismisses the action before the debtor-plaintiff can petition the bankruptcy court, the debtor-plaintiff may never return to the bankruptcy court.

Even where a non-bankruptcy court determines that the debtor-plaintiff has standing but is not the real party in interest, the court may use its discretion to dismiss the case without substituting the real party in interest. In \textit{Feist v. Consolidated Freightways}, the District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania recognized that the debtor-plaintiff had standing, but was not the

\begin{footnotesize}
\footnotesize
\textsuperscript{194} \textit{Parker}, 365 F.3d at 1272 (“Generally speaking, a pre-petition cause of action is the property of the Chapter 7 bankruptcy estate, and only the trustee in bankruptcy has standing to pursue it.”); Klein, Ponoroff & Borrey, \textit{supra} note 112, at 884 (“[T]he real problem is that the debtor is not the real party in interest and lacks standing to prosecute an action that is property of the estate.”).

\textsuperscript{195} \textit{Parker}, 365 F.3d at 1272.

\textsuperscript{196} \textit{E.g.}, \textit{id}.

\textsuperscript{197} \textit{See}, \textit{e.g.}, Longaker v. Boston Sci. Corp., 715 F.3d 658, 659–60, 663 (8th Cir. 2013) (affirming the district court’s dismissal of the debtor-plaintiff’s claim under Federal Rule 12(b)(1) on the ground that the debtor-plaintiff lacked standing).

\textsuperscript{198} There is disagreement as to whether the issue is the debtor-plaintiff’s standing. In \textit{Longaker}, Judge Bye dissented, finding that the majority opinion’s conclusion regarding the debtor-plaintiff’s standing “erroneously conflates standing with the validity of Longaker’s cause of action.” \textit{Id.} at 664 (Bye, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Judge Bye would have found that the debtor-plaintiff adequately “show[ed] an ‘injury in fact’ that is ‘fairly . . . trace[able] to the challenged action of the defendant’ and likely to be ‘redressed by a favorable decision.’” \textit{Id.} at 663 (quoting \textit{Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife}, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992)). If the debtor-plaintiff has standing but is not the real party in interest, the appropriate action by the non-bankruptcy court would be following Federal Rule 17(a)(3). See \textit{Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(a)(3)}.

\textsuperscript{199} \textit{See}, \textit{e.g.}, \textit{Longaker}, 715 F.3d 658.

\textsuperscript{200} \textit{Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(a)(3)} (emphasis added).
\end{footnotesize}
real party in interest under Federal Rule 17. Before substituting the real party in interest (the Chapter 7 trustee), the court found that it should consider the debtor-plaintiff’s good faith in filing the lawsuit. Even after the trustee argued that the creditors would be the ones to suffer from a dismissal, the court found that it should dismiss the lawsuit due to the debtor-plaintiff’s failure to prove that not disclosing his lawsuit in his bankruptcy case was an honest mistake. The actions of this district court further highlight non-bankruptcy courts’ misguided reliance on debtor-plaintiffs’ good faith at the expense of the bankruptcy system’s goal of ensuring a fair distribution of a debtor’s assets to creditors.

Dismissing a debtor-plaintiff’s lawsuit because she lacks standing or is not the real party in interest can have the same harsh and inequitable outcome as applying judicial estoppel. The harsh outcome clearly results where the trustee is not permitted to intervene. It also results where the bankruptcy court does not receive notice regarding the undisclosed lawsuit. If the bankruptcy court is unaware of the lawsuit, the court cannot appoint a trustee to pursue the lawsuit for the benefit of the creditors. This issue of notice is also relevant when a non-bankruptcy court dismisses a debtor-plaintiff’s lawsuit based on judicial estoppel. The debtor-plaintiff may not see the incentive of providing notice to the bankruptcy court or petitioning the bankruptcy court to reopen the bankruptcy case because the bankruptcy court could prevent her from receiving

---

202 See id. at 276 (“If Plaintiff did not make an honest and understandable mistake when he filed this action in his own name, this Court will not allow substitution of the real party in interest.”)
203 See id. at 280 (“If substitution is not permitted in this case, it is Plaintiff’s creditors who will suffer most, as they received nothing during his original bankruptcy case and could receive nothing now.”).
204 Id.
205 Id. (“This Court will not come to the aid of a plaintiff under circumstances such as this where plaintiff cannot prove that his prior actions were done in good faith.”). In balancing the interests of the creditors with the court’s interest in preventing the debtor-plaintiff from benefitting from his bad faith actions, the court found that the interest of the “creditors in recovering some of the debts owed to them is not sufficient to justify substitution of the bankruptcy trustee as the real party in interest in this case.” Id.
206 See infra Part II.B.
207 See infra note 217 and accompanying text. Another issue that arises is whether a non-bankruptcy court could also estop the trustee from bringing the claim. The federal courts of appeals are split on this issue. Compare Reed v. City of Arlington, 650 F.3d 571, 579 (5th Cir. 2011) (“[A]n innocent bankruptcy trustee may pursue for the benefit of creditors a judgment or cause of action that the debtor—having concealed that asset during bankruptcy—is himself estopped from pursuing.”), with Barger v. City of Cartersville, 348 F.3d 1289, 1293 (11th Cir. 2003) (allowing the trustee to replace the debtor-plaintiff as the real party in interest, but still estopping the monetary claims).
any of the monetary benefit. Moreover, a debtor petitioning to reopen her bankruptcy case must consider other possible negative consequences. For failing to disclose a potential lawsuit in bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court can sanction the debtor or revoke the debtor’s discharge. Thus, the debtor-plaintiff may not voluntarily return to the bankruptcy court in either context, harming the creditors and disrupting the functions of the bankruptcy court.

B. Reopening the Debtor’s Bankruptcy Case

Despite the potential negative consequences, some debtor-plaintiffs petition the bankruptcy court to reopen the bankruptcy case and thereby request that the court appoint a new trustee. The debtor-plaintiffs then seek to have the trustee intervene in the lawsuit.

Bankruptcy courts have discretion to reopen a bankruptcy case. After an estate has been fully administered, the court discharges the trustee and closes the case. After the court closes a case, the case may be reopened in the same court to “administer assets, to accord relief to the debtor, or for other cause.”

---

208 See Lopez v. Specialty Rests. Corp. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22, 30 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002) (“If a debtor shows bad faith, or if third parties are prejudiced by nondisclosure of an asset, then the bankruptcy court can exercise its discretion to disallow any claimed exemption in the asset, in whole or in part.”). At least one court has found that the issue of whether a debtor-plaintiff’s “damages should be limited to the amount owed to his creditors in his bankruptcy case is an issue within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.” Korti v. A.W. Holdings, LLC, No. 1:13-CV-63, 2014 WL 793360, at *6 (N.D. Ind. Feb. 26, 2014).

210 See infra Part IV.A.

211 See infra Part IV.A.

212 See, e.g., Burger, 348 F.3d at 1291–92 (discussing the actions of a debtor-plaintiff who moved to reopen her bankruptcy case after the defendant in the lawsuit raised the judicial estoppel defense).

213 See, e.g., In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 32 (“If the purpose of the reopening is to deal with unscheduled assets as property of the estate, then it is per se an abuse of discretion not to order appointment of a trustee.”).

214 See, e.g., Parker v. Wendy’s Int’l, Inc., 365 F.3d 1268, 1270 (11th Cir. 2004) (“[The trustee] moved to intervene in this case or, alternatively, for substitution as the real party in interest.”).

215 See Debtors’ Counsel Beware, supra note 32, at 206 (“Reopening of closed cases is discretionary with the bankruptcy court . . . .”); see also 11 U.S.C. § 350(b) (2012) (“A case may be reopened in the court in which such case was closed . . . .”).

216 See 11 U.S.C. § 350(a) (“After an estate is fully administered and the court has discharged the trustee, the court shall close the case.”).

217 11 U.S.C. § 350(b); see also 11 U.S.C. § 350(b) (“A case may be reopened on motion of the debtor or other party in interest pursuant to § 350(b) of the Code. In a chapter 7, 12, or 13 case a trustee shall not be appointed by the United States trustee unless the court determines that a trustee is necessary to protect the interests of creditors and the debtor or to insure efficient administration of the case.”).
Because reopening a bankruptcy case is discretionary, some courts may consider the debtor’s failure to schedule a potential lawsuit as bad faith and deny the request.218 The bankruptcy court may also consider whether the creditors would benefit by reopening the bankruptcy case and pursuing the lawsuit.219 In In re Maloy, the bankruptcy court denied a debtor’s motion to reopen his bankruptcy case because the debtor’s exemption claim likely exceeded the value of the lawsuit, leaving no benefit for the creditors.220 Alternatively, some courts find that reopening the bankruptcy case to administer an asset is required “where ‘assets of such probability, administrability, and substance’ appear to exist as to make it unreasonable under all the circumstances for the court not to deal with them.”221

Allowing the debtor to reopen her bankruptcy case does not prevent the court hearing her lawsuit from applying judicial estoppel, regardless of the disposition of the bankruptcy case.222 In Barger v. City of Cartersville, the district court dismissed Barger’s lawsuit on grounds of judicial estoppel.223 One week prior to the district court’s order, Barger had successfully reopened her bankruptcy case.224 One week after the district court’s order, the bankruptcy court issued a written order finding that Barger’s failure to disclose the lawsuit “was caused by her bankruptcy attorney’s ‘inadvertence’ and had no substantive effect on the bankruptcy petition.”225 On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit found that Barger’s failure to disclose the lawsuit “could not in any event be considered 218 See In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 25. The bankruptcy court in In re Lopez denied the debtor’s motion to reopen and on appeal, the Appellate Panel found that the court “appeared to be motivated in part by a desire to sanction [the debtor] for not previously disclosing the Action.” Id. at 29. The Appellate Panel found that although a motion to reopen is addressed to the sound discretion of the bankruptcy court, “the court has the duty to reopen an estate whenever prima facie proof is made that it has not been fully administered.” Id. at 27 (quoting Kozman v. Herzig (In re Herzig), 96 B.R. 264, 266 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1989)).

219 See In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 29 (noting that situations may exist where creditors would not benefit from the reopening of a bankruptcy case).
221 In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 27 (quoting In re Herzig, 96 B.R. at 266); see also In re Maloy, 195 B.R. at 521 (concluding that the debtor should be allowed “to continue his claim in the District Court, subject to encumbrances, if any, which might have attached as a result of his failure to timely list the asset during the pendency of the bankruptcy case”).
222 See, e.g., Barger v. City of Cartersville, 348 F.3d 1289, 1292 (11th Cir. 2003) (where reopening the bankruptcy case did not preclude the district court from applying judicial estoppel to the debtor’s lawsuit).
223 Id.
224 Id.
225 Id.
inadvertent”226 and affirmed the district court’s order estopping the debtor-plaintiff’s claims for money damages.227 Not only does Barger illustrate the inequity caused by judicial estoppel with regard to the debtor-plaintiff and the debtor-plaintiff’s creditors, it also demonstrates judicial estoppel’s failure to protect the bankruptcy court’s interests.

IV. AN EQUITABLE FRAMEWORK BASED ON THE BANKRUPTCY CODE

As early as 1905, the U.S. Supreme Court recognized that in dealing with undisclosed assets from bankruptcy, the proper framework requires a consideration of equitable concerns from the standpoint of the courts, the debtor, and the creditors.228 The proper framework also requires a holistic incorporation of the Bankruptcy Code’s fundamental provisions. This Part first discusses how judicial estoppel has failed to address these concerns. This Part concludes with a proposed framework that acts in accordance with the Bankruptcy Code and equitable considerations.

A. Application of Judicial Estoppel Thwarts the Goals of Judicial Estoppel and the Bankruptcy System

One of the goals of the bankruptcy system is ensuring a fair distribution of the debtor’s assets for the benefit of creditors.229 When courts use judicial estoppel to dismiss a debtor-plaintiff’s lawsuit, the debtor-plaintiff is not the 226 Id. at 1295. Ignoring the potential benefit to the bankruptcy estate and the creditors, the court in Barger instead focused on punishing the debtor-plaintiff. The court reiterated its reasoning from a previous case, finding that allowing the debtor-plaintiff to reopen her bankruptcy case “suggests that a debtor should consider disclosing potential assets only if he is caught concealing them,” and “would only diminish the necessary incentive to provide the bankruptcy court with a truthful disclosure of the debtor’s assets.” Id. at 1297 (quoting Burns v. Pemco Aeroplex, Inc., 291 F.3d 1282, 1288 (11th Cir. 2002)).

227 Id. at 1297. Although the court in Barger allowed the debtor-plaintiff to proceed on her injunctive relief claims, id., estopping the claims for money damages that could potentially benefit the bankruptcy estate is what ultimately harms creditors and the bankruptcy system.

228 See First Nat’l Bank of Jacksboro v. Lasater, 196 U.S. 115, 119 (1905) (“It cannot be that a bankrupt, by omitting to schedule and withholding from his trustee all knowledge of certain property, can, after his estate in bankruptcy has been finally closed up, immediately thereafter assert title to the property on the ground that the trustee had never taken any action in respect to it. If the claim was of value (as certainly this claim was, according to the judgment below) it was something to which the creditors were entitled, and this bankrupt could not, by withholding knowledge of its existence, obtain a release from his debts and still assert title to the property.”).

229 See Rafael I. Pardo & Michelle R. Lacey, Undue Hardship in the Bankruptcy Courts: An Empirical Assessment of the Discharge of Educational Debt, 74 U. Cin. L. Rev. 405, 413–15 (2005) (discussing the equality principle as a goal of bankruptcy that “accords procedural relief to creditors in the form of an orderly, collective process that administers the assets of a debtor to its creditors as a response to the common pool problem that arises when a debtor has insufficient assets to repay his or her debts”).
only affected party; any creditor who is not paid in full in the debtor-plaintiff’s bankruptcy case is harmed by the initial failure to schedule the lawsuit and further harmed by the non-bankruptcy court’s decision to estop the debtor’s lawsuit if that lawsuit could have been pursued to benefit the creditors. This is true regardless of whether the debtor-plaintiff’s failure to schedule the lawsuit was intentional or inadvertent. In Love v. Tyson Foods, Inc., even though the Fifth Circuit acknowledged that “the effect of judicial estoppel on creditors is a consideration that could discourage courts from applying the doctrine,” the court upheld the district court’s decision applying judicial estoppel to an undisclosed lawsuit. The optimal course of action would allow a newly appointed trustee to weigh the considerations and decide whether to pursue the claim for the benefit of creditors or abandon the claim to the debtor.

Due to the nature of the undisclosed lawsuit situation, the judicial estoppel defense arises in both federal and state courts. This fact is not unique to this context; however, the lack of uniformity is a more important problem because all undisclosed lawsuits subject to judicial estoppel arise out of bankruptcy cases. Congress granted the federal district courts original and exclusive jurisdiction over all bankruptcy cases. Congress went even further to grant federal courts exclusive jurisdiction over all the property of the debtor and property of the estate. However, state and federal courts have both been deciding judicial estoppel cases that involve an undisclosed lawsuit from a 230 See Lopez v. Specialty Rests. Corp. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22, 28 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002) ("[i]f the Action has any value then creditors stand to benefit . . . .").

231 See In re Dewberry, 266 B.R. 916, 921 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 2001) ("[W]hen reopening of the case is sought for the purpose of administering a previously undisclosed asset, the question of debtor’s good faith is irrelevant.").
232 677 F.3d 258, 266 (5th Cir. 2012).
233 See In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 28. In In re Lopez, the Bankruptcy Appellate Panel found that “[i]f the [bankruptcy] case is reopened a chapter 7 trustee can be appointed, investigate whether the Action has value, and then prosecute it, settle it, abandon it, or arrange for [the debtor] to prosecute it in exchange for the estate receiving a share of the proceeds.” Id. Moreover, “[i]f the chapter 7 trustee can also notify creditors to file claims if it appears the estate may have any assets, and can make distributions on those claims out of any eventual recovery.” Id.
234 See supra Part II.B–C.
235 See MSR Expl., Ltd. v. Meridian Oil, Inc., 74 F.3d 910, 915 (9th Cir. 1996) ("It is true that in many circumstances state courts can, and do, resolve questions of federal law ‘with no difficulty.’ Nevertheless, the unique, historical, and even constitutional need for uniformity in the administration of the bankruptcy laws is another indication that Congress wished to leave the regulation of parties before the bankruptcy court in the hands of the federal courts alone.” (citation omitted)); see also Int’l Shoe Co. v. Pinkus, 278 U.S. 261, 265 (1929) ("The power of Congress to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States is unrestricted and paramount.").
236 See supra note 83 and accompanying text.
237 See supra note 83 and accompanying text.
debtor’s bankruptcy case. This issue is problematic at the most fundamental level because all federal courts recognize the same doctrine of judicial estoppel, but not all states apply the same doctrine. As a result, similarly situated debtors are treated differently based on their choice of forum. By enacting comprehensive federal bankruptcy legislation, Congress intended to prevent this lack of uniformity. The lack of uniformity in state courts is only the beginning of the problem in the undisclosed lawsuit context.

The lack of uniformity issue is exacerbated by the discord within federal circuits in applying judicial estoppel. Even if state courts wanted to follow the federal judicial estoppel doctrine with respect to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy, there is no coherent federal judicial estoppel doctrine for them to follow. In the undisclosed lawsuit context, the federal circuits apply the Maine factors differently, use different standards of review, apply different alternatives to judicial estoppel, and apply different law when sitting in diversity.

The lack of cohesion throughout the courts might have developed because judicial estoppel is not equipped to deal with the unique circumstance of the undisclosed lawsuit context. Judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine meant to protect the integrity of the judicial system, but in this context, it causes harm to debtors, creditors, and the bankruptcy court system. An undisclosed lawsuit is part of the bankruptcy estate, and had the lawsuit been properly scheduled, it might have been pursued for the benefit of the creditors. Estopping a debtor without allowing a trustee the opportunity to review the asset undermines the bankruptcy system’s goal of having a fair distribution of the debtor’s assets for the benefit of the creditors. Barring a debtor’s claim on the basis of judicial

238 See supra Part II.B–C.
239 See supra Part II.B.
240 See supra Part II.B.
241 See supra Part II.B–C.
242 See Int'l Shoe Co. v. Pinkus, 278 U.S. 261, 265 (1929) (finding that in the context of federal bankruptcy law, “[t]he national purpose to establish uniformity necessarily excludes state regulation”); see also In re Ross, 18 B.R. 364, 367 (N.D.N.Y.) (“[S]tates are prohibited from interfering with the uniform nature of bankruptcy law.”), aff’d sub nom. Regan v. Ross, 691 F.2d 81 (2d Cir. 1982).
243 See Int'l Shoe Co. v. Pinkus.
244 See supra Part II.B.
245 See supra Part II.B.
246 See WRIGHT ET AL., supra note 98, §4477 (“Specific areas of federal law may carry with them special needs of substance or judicial administration that support development of special rules of judicial estoppel that reflect those needs. Bankruptcy proceedings furnish a good illustration.”).
247 See supra note 46 and accompanying text.
248 See supra note 50.
249 See supra note 50.
estoppel also provides a windfall to the defendant.\textsuperscript{250} The non-bankruptcy courts ignore a defendant’s supposed wrongdoing based on the debtor’s mistake in her bankruptcy case and not on the actual merits of the lawsuit.\textsuperscript{251} When the debtor’s mistake is inadvertent, denying the debtor her day in court is hardly justifiable. Judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine, but its application in this context creates inequitable results.\textsuperscript{252}

In addition to the equitable concerns of applying judicial estoppel are the statutory concerns. Many courts fail to incorporate fundamental provisions of the Bankruptcy Code when applying judicial estoppel to an undisclosed asset.\textsuperscript{253} A cohesive interpretation of the Bankruptcy Code reveals a framework for the undisclosed lawsuit context that is free of the statutory concerns created by judicial estoppel as well as the equitable concerns.

\subsection*{B. An Equitable, Statutory Framework}

The broad scope of the Bankruptcy Code’s provisions defining property of the estate and the automatic stay and the bankruptcy court’s broad jurisdictional grant work in tandem to ensure the debtor’s affairs are centralized in a single forum—the bankruptcy court.\textsuperscript{254} This centralization prevents conflicting judgments from non-bankruptcy courts and harmonizes the interests of creditors.\textsuperscript{255} Non-bankruptcy courts have recognized that undisclosed lawsuits are property of the estate, but the same courts have failed to recognize the applicability of the automatic stay and the bankruptcy court’s exclusive jurisdiction. The automatic stay and the bankruptcy court’s broad jurisdictional grant are essential to the proper functioning of the bankruptcy system and cannot \textsuperscript{250} See Lopez v. Specialty Rests. Corp. (\textit{In re Lopez}), 283 B.R. 22, 27 n.9 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002) (noting that the defendant’s “possible judicial estoppel defense is a windfall that would bar what might be a successful claim for sexual harassment”).

\textsuperscript{251} See id.

\textsuperscript{252} See Travelers Indem. Co. v. Griner (\textit{In re Griner}), 240 B.R. 432, 439 (Bankr. S.D. Ala. 1999) (finding that the application of judicial estoppel to the debtor-plaintiff’s undisclosed lawsuit was “overly harsh and inequitable as well,” and that “[\textit{e]veryone . . . loses under its theory”

\textsuperscript{253} See \textit{In re Lopez}, 283 B.R. at 31 (Klein, J., concurring) (writing “separately to emphasize salient practice points about the problem of unscheduled causes of action that is increasingly a headache for nonbankruptcy courts and litigants”). In \textit{In re Lopez}, Judge Klein argued that “the judicial estoppel defense to the basic unscheduled cause of action is meretricious and potentially inexpedient in two respects.” Id. First, “the trustee is the real party in interest and the more correct defenses are that the action is not being prosecuted by the real party in interest and that the debtor lacks standing.” Id. at 32. Second, “dismissing the action probably violates the automatic stay.” Id.

\textsuperscript{254} Sunshine Dev., Inc. v. FDIC, 33 F.3d 106, 114 (1st Cir. 1994).

\textsuperscript{255} \textit{Id.}
be ignored in this context. This section first details the correct application of the automatic stay to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy that necessitates returning to the bankruptcy court. It then discusses the resulting jurisdictional issues that arise when a bankruptcy case is pending. This section concludes by providing an example of equitable treatment of an undisclosed lawsuit that properly considers the goals of the bankruptcy system.

1. The Automatic Stay Continues to Act Against Undisclosed Lawsuits

The scope of the automatic stay is intentionally broad. The automatic stay protects the interests of both debtors and creditors. It goes into effect immediately upon the filing of a bankruptcy petition and is essential to the goals of the bankruptcy system. Despite all of this, nearly all courts applying judicial estoppel have failed to consider the impact of the automatic stay on an undisclosed lawsuit. Although courts applying judicial estoppel in this context rely on the Bankruptcy Code’s broad definition of property of the estate, the same courts completely ignore the role of the automatic stay. This piecemeal approach to incorporating the Bankruptcy Code’s provisions into the judicial estoppel analysis has led courts down a path of inconsistency and inequity.

The Bankruptcy Code dictates how undisclosed lawsuits should be handled prior to any consideration of dismissal based on judicial estoppel. Filing a bankruptcy petition automatically creates an estate that is comprised of nearly all of the debtor’s property and also triggers the automatic stay, which prevents nearly all acts against the debtor, property of the debtor, and property of the estate. If a debtor has a lawsuit that should be part of the bankruptcy estate when she files for bankruptcy, that lawsuit becomes property of the estate upon filing, regardless of whether the debtor correctly schedules the cause of action. When the debtor’s bankruptcy case is closed, property of the estate

---

256 See supra note 64 and accompanying text; see also Clark v. United States (In re Clark), 207 B.R. 559, 565 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1997) (“Congress placed the court at the vortex of bankruptcy proceedings and the provisions of the automatic stay are designed as the initial channels that regulate the flow of economic consequences, which, if left unchecked or diverted by extra judicial determinations, would drown a debtor’s opportunity for a fresh start and destroy a creditor’s opportunity to receive payments . . . .”).

258 See supra notes 68–69 and accompanying text.

259 See supra note 65 and accompanying text.

260 See supra note 64 and accompanying text.

261 See supra note 37 and accompanying text.

262 See supra note 66 and accompanying text.

263 See supra note 38 and accompanying text; see also Tyler v. DH Capital Mgmt., Inc., 736 F.3d 455, 465 (6th Cir. 2013) (finding that the district court had given “undue significance” to the bankruptcy scheduling that has been scheduled and not administered is abandoned back to the debtor and deemed administered. Property that is not administered or abandoned under § 554 of the Bankruptcy Code “remains property of the estate.” Property that is not scheduled remains property of the estate indefinitely after the bankruptcy case is closed. Under § 362 of the Bankruptcy Code, the automatic stay continues to act against property of the estate “until such property is no longer property of the estate.” Thus, the automatic stay continues to act against undisclosed lawsuits indefinitely.

Section 362 acts as a stay against “any act to obtain possession of property of the estate or of property from the estate or to exercise control over property of the estate.” Dismissing a debtor-plaintiff’s claim that is property of the estate constitutes “exercis[ing] control over property of the estate” in violation of the automatic stay. The bankruptcy court is the only court that can “terminate, annul or modify the automatic stay.” Accordingly, parties must return to the bankruptcy court to get relief from the automatic stay before taking any act that may qualify as exercising control over an undisclosed lawsuit.

\[264\] See supra note 44 and accompanying text.

\[265\] 11 U.S.C. § 554(d) (2012); see also supra note 46 and accompanying text.

\[266\] See supra note 46 and accompanying text.

\[268\] See Lopez v. Specialty Rests. Co. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22, 32 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2002) (Klein, J., concurring) (noting that because “the automatic stay remains in effect to protect property of the estate so long as it is property of the estate, even after the bankruptcy case is closed[,] dismissing the action probably violates the automatic stay” (citation omitted)); see also Slater v. U.S. Steel Corp., 820 F.3d 1193, 1245 (11th Cir.) (Tjoflat, J., specially concurring), rehe'g en banc granted, opinion vacated (11th Cir. 2016).

\[270\] See Acands, Inc. v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co., 435 F.3d 252, 259 (3d Cir. 2006) (finding that the automatic stay applied to an arbitration “once it became apparent that proceeding further could negatively impact the bankruptcy estate” and noting that “Section 362(a)(3) . . . applies to actions against third parties as well as actions against the debtor”); see also Klein, Ponoroff & Borrey, supra note 112, at 884 (“The continued applicability of the automatic stay casts doubt on the ability of the nonbankruptcy court to dismiss the action.”); supra note 268 and accompanying text; cf. Slater, 820 F.3d at 1225 n.84 (Tjoflat, J., specially concurring) (proposing that when a party opposes a debtor-plaintiff’s motion to reopen her bankruptcy case, the party is “engaging in an ‘act to obtain possession of property of the estate’” in violation of the automatic stay); Montoya v. Daniel O’Connell’s Sons, Inc., No. 15-CV-01580 (ALC) (KNF), 2017 WL 1167336, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 28, 2017) (noting that the debtor-plaintiff's decision to bring an undisclosed lawsuit “without declaring his interest in it to the bankruptcy court likely violated § 362(a)(3)’s proscription against ‘any act to obtain . . . or to exercise control over property of the estate’”)

\[271\] In re Dominguez, 312 B.R. 499, 505 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2004) (“[I]t is undisputed that only a bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to terminate, annul or modify the automatic stay.” (emphasis omitted)); see also 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(G) (2012).
Failure to return to the bankruptcy court in this context has a significant implication: judgments that are ordered in violation of the automatic stay are void in the majority of jurisdictions. Void judgments do not have claim preclusive effect. If the statute of limitations on a debtor-plaintiff’s claim has not run, she should be able to pursue her claim under this argument.

For a non-bankruptcy court to proceed with a lawsuit where the defendant has raised the defense of judicial estoppel or the debtor’s lack of standing, this Comment argues that the lawsuit must be stayed so the parties can petition the bankruptcy court to reopen the bankruptcy case to request relief from the automatic stay and permit the bankruptcy court to properly administer the asset. The continued application of the automatic stay necessitates this action. Moreover, this action ensures the involvement of the bankruptcy court and eliminates the issue of notice discussed in Part III. If the bankruptcy court reopens the case, the bankruptcy court may then appoint a bankruptcy trustee who “has authority to act for the benefit of the estate and may sell the cause of action, prosecute it in nonbankruptcy court, settle it, or abandon it to the debtor as of inconsequential value to the estate.” The trustee’s decision in administering the claim will depend on the specific facts of the bankruptcy case and the lawsuit.

2. The Bankruptcy Court’s Exclusive Jurisdiction over Undisclosed Lawsuits

The continued effect of the automatic stay in the undisclosed lawsuit context necessitates reopening the bankruptcy case, which in turn creates a jurisdictional issue in both federal and state courts. When a bankruptcy case is open, the federal district court, and by referral the bankruptcy court, has exclusive jurisdiction over undisclosed lawsuits. Additionally, the bankruptcy court’s exclusive jurisdiction over undisclosed lawsuits arises from the automatic stay.

---

272 See LaBarge v. Vierkant (In re Vierkant), 240 B.R. 317, 322 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 1999) (“The overwhelming majority of the circuits hold that an action in violation of the automatic stay is void ab initio.” (emphasis added)).

273 See In re Vierkant, 240 B.R. at 325 (“[A]n action taken in violation of the automatic stay is void ab initio . . . [and] as a matter of law, a void default judgment cannot be given collateral estoppel effect . . . .”).

274 See Lopez v. Specialty Rests. Corp. (In re Lopez), 283 B.R. 22, 32 (Klein, J., concurring) (“The expedient solution to [the undisclosed lawsuit] dilemma is to require the parties to return to bankruptcy court for reopening so that a trustee can be appointed to deal with the cause of action that is property of the estate.”).

275 Staying the lawsuit and moving the bankruptcy court to reopen the case and appoint a trustee would also help satisfy Federal Rule 17(a)(3)’s mandate that the court may not dismiss the lawsuit until the real party in interest is given a reasonable time to intervene. See supra notes 198–200 and accompanying text.

276 See Klein, Ponoroff & Borrey, supra note 112, at 884.

277 In re Lopez, 283 B.R. at 32–33 (Klein, J., concurring) (footnote omitted); see also Montoya v. Daniel O’Connell’s Sons, Inc., No. 15-CV-01580 (ALC) (KNF), 2017 WL 1167336, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 28, 2017) (finding that the trustee pursuing the undisclosed lawsuit as the real party in interest “is not precluded by [the automatic stay], as this section ‘does not address actions . . . which would inure to the benefit of the bankruptcy estate’” (quoting In re Abreu, 527 B.R. 570, 579 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2015))).
jurisdiction over property of the estate. Under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a), “[e]ach district court may provide that any or all cases under title 11 and any or all proceedings arising under title 11 or arising in or related to a case under title 11 shall be referred to the bankruptcy judges for the district.” Under § 157(c), “bankruptcy judge[s] may hear a proceeding . . . that is otherwise related to a case under title 11.”

An undisclosed lawsuit that is property of the estate is arguably related to the bankruptcy case and must be referred to the bankruptcy court. All federal districts have a local rule or standing order referring cases under Title 11 to the bankruptcy court. The Eastern District of Missouri’s local rule refers all cases under Title 11 as well as all proceedings related to a case under Title 11. The language of the local rule creates a mandatory referral and not a discretionary one. In the Eastern District of Missouri and any other district with a mandatory referral rule, any lawsuit that is brought in a federal district court that is related to a bankruptcy case must be referred to the bankruptcy court. In a district 280 See Richardson v. United Parcel Serv., 195 B.R. 737, 740 (E.D. Mo. 1996) (finding that the debtor-plaintiff’s claim was related to the bankruptcy case because “it could conceivably have an effect on the estate”).

281 The Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Michigan found that administering a referred undisclosed lawsuit was a core proceeding. Johnson v. Lewis Cass Intermediate Sch. Dist. (In re Johnson), 345 B.R. 816, 818 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 2006) (“This adversary proceeding is a core proceeding because it involves the administration of the debtor’s estate and affects the liquidation of the assets of the estate and the debtor-creditor relationships.” (citations omitted)).
282 See supra note 82 and accompanying text.
283 See E.D. Mo. R. BANKR. P. 81-9.01(B)(1) (“All cases under Title 11 of the United States Code, and all proceedings arising under Title 11 or arising in or related to a case under Title 11, are referred to the bankruptcy judges for this district, who shall exercise the full extent of the authority conferred upon them.” (emphasis added)).
284 See id.; see also Bruce H. White, Maneuvering a “Related to” Case from State Court to Bankruptcy Court in Another Jurisdiction, 16 AM. BANKR. INST. J., May 1997, at 30, 30 (“The district courts in many jurisdictions have adopted local rules whereby matters such as those in § 157(a) are automatically referred to the bankruptcy court for the district.”). If an undisclosed lawsuit is in a different federal district than the district in which the debtor-plaintiff filed for bankruptcy, the lawsuit would first have to be transferred to the appropriate district court under 28 U.S.C. § 1412, which provides that “[a] district court may transfer a case or proceeding where referral to the bankruptcy court is not mandatory, the district court may voluntarily refer the lawsuit to the bankruptcy court.285

State courts lack jurisdiction over property of the estate once a bankruptcy case is reopened.286 However, moving a lawsuit from state court to the bankruptcy court is a more complicated matter.287 Generally, the lawsuit may not be removed from state court directly to the bankruptcy court.288 Instead, the lawsuit must first be removed to the district court and then may be transferred to the bankruptcy court by referral.289 In some federal districts, referral to the bankruptcy court may occur automatically once a notice of removal is filed.290 Although this process may be cumbersome, “it is the method by which jurisdictional pitfalls can be avoided.”291

3. Equitable Treatment of Undisclosed Lawsuits

The following case provides an example of what may happen if a debtor-plaintiff’s undisclosed lawsuit is referred to the bankruptcy court. In Richardson v. United Parcel Service, the debtor-plaintiff brought an employment discrimination claim in the district court for the Eastern District of Missouri.292 The defendant filed a motion to dismiss on the ground that the 285 See, e.g., In re Johnson, 345 B.R. at 821 (entering an order referring the proceeding to the bankruptcy court to decide the defendant’s motion for summary judgment on a theory of judicial estoppel).

---

286 See 28 U.S.C. § 1334(e) (2012) (granting “exclusive jurisdiction” over property of the estate to the “district court in which a case under title 11 is commenced or is pending”).

287 See generally White, supra note 284 (discussing the issues involved to move a claim from a state court to a bankruptcy court).

289 Id. This process is further complicated if the state court is not in the same state as the bankruptcy court. In this situation, the claim could not be removed directly to the district where the bankruptcy case is pending. See White, supra note 284 (“[Section 1452] does not permit removal of an action directly to a district court or bankruptcy court in another state or jurisdiction.”). The claim would have to be removed “to the district court for the district where such civil action is pending.” 28 U.S.C. § 1452(a) (2012). Then the claim could be transferred to the appropriate federal district court and, by referral, the bankruptcy court. See White, supra note 284.

290 See, e.g., Jeffries v. Bar J. Forest Prods., Inc. (In re Jeffries), 191 B.R. 861, 863 (Bankr. D. Or. 1995) (“In Oregon, the notice of removal is automatically referred to the bankruptcy court by the federal district court pursuant to standing orders issued under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a).”).

291 White, supra note 284, at 31.

lacked standing to pursue the claim because he had failed to schedule the claim in his bankruptcy petition. The defendant also argued for dismissal based on judicial estoppel. The district court in Richardson found that it must refer the debtor-plaintiff’s case to the bankruptcy court because the case was related to the debtor-plaintiff’s bankruptcy “as it could conceivably have an effect on the estate being administered in the bankruptcy.” The court denied the defendant’s motions to dismiss without prejudice and referred the case to the bankruptcy court for further proceedings. Following the referral to the bankruptcy court, the defendant filed another motion to dismiss on the ground of judicial estoppel, and the trustee intervened in the proceeding. The bankruptcy court denied the defendant’s motion, and the trustee settled the proceeding for $1500 for the benefit of the bankruptcy estate.

Once a bankruptcy case is reopened and the undisclosed lawsuit is referred to the bankruptcy court, there are many possible outcomes that will not violate the automatic stay or other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. The outcome in Richardson is what may happen if a trustee finds that pursuing the undisclosed lawsuit would be beneficial to the bankruptcy estate. Referring the lawsuit to the bankruptcy court does not eliminate the judicial estoppel defense. If the bankruptcy court applies judicial estoppel, it will be bound by the same precedents as federal district courts. However, the bankruptcy court is better situated to determine whether the debtor-plaintiff’s lawsuit should be estopped based on the Maine factors and other important considerations that should be weighed in the bankruptcy context. For example, the bankruptcy court may use its discretion to invoke other statutorily created options for penalizing a

293 Id.
294 Id.
295 Id. at 740.
296 Id.
297 Defendant’s Motion to Dismiss, Richardson v. United Parcel Serv., No. 96-ap-04255 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. July 10, 1996), ECF No. 4.
302 See WRIGHT ET AL., supra note 98, §§ 4477 (discussing specific areas of federal law that support development of special rules of judicial estoppel that reflect those needs. Bankruptcy proceedings furnish a good illustration.”).
debtor who acted in bad faith to avoid further harm to creditors.\textsuperscript{303} By invoking statutorily prescribed penalties for debtor misconduct when necessary—instead of judicial estoppel—bankruptcy courts can issue orders that protect the judicial system without creating inequitable results for creditors.

The Supreme Court developed flexible factors for judicial estoppel because the doctrine should be applied on a case-by-case basis.\textsuperscript{304} The application of judicial estoppel should not undermine the goals of bankruptcy or violate the Bankruptcy Code. When a debtor fails to disclose a lawsuit in bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court is in the best position to weigh the necessary considerations and issue orders that are equitable and uphold the goals of the bankruptcy system.\textsuperscript{305}

CONCLUSION

This Comment analyzes the application of judicial estoppel to undisclosed lawsuits from bankruptcy. Although non-bankruptcy courts have been issuing orders based on judicial estoppel in this context for years, this Comment argues that non-bankruptcy courts violate the automatic stay by issuing such orders. The continued effect of the automatic stay on property of the estate necessitates the reopening of the debtor’s bankruptcy case so that the undisclosed lawsuit may be properly administered.

Further, this Comment demonstrates that the bankruptcy court is in the best position to determine whether to judicially estop a debtor-plaintiff’s lawsuit. Although the variance throughout the circuits regarding judicial estoppel does not disappear simply because the bankruptcy court is applying judicial estoppel, the bankruptcy court is in a position to make a more equitable ruling because of its familiarity with the debtor, the debtor’s bankruptcy case, and the creditors. Most importantly, returning to the bankruptcy court will accomplish judicial estoppel’s goal of protecting the integrity of the courts by allowing bankruptcy \textsuperscript{303} See, e.g., supra notes 208–10.

\textsuperscript{304} See supra note 106 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{305} Stallings v. Hussmann Corp., 447 F.3d 1041, 1046 (8th Cir. 2006) (“[D]etermining whether a litigant is playing fast and loose with the courts has a subjective element [and] [i]ts resolution draws upon the trier’s intimate knowledge of the case at bar and his or her first-hand observations of the lawyers and their litigation strategies.” (quoting Alternative Sys. Concepts, Inc. v. Synopsys, Inc., 374 F.3d 23, 31 (1st Cir. 2004))).
courts to properly uphold the goals of the bankruptcy system while not violating the Bankruptcy Code or the jurisdictional grant of bankruptcy courts.

Caryn Wang*